Love Hurts

Holiday cheer falls flat in romantic comedy

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Love Actually is as clumsy as a two-foot-tall greeting card—and just as tacky. Veteran English writer Richard Curtis, who makes his directorial debut here, operates under the same say-it-loud and pile-on-the-exclamation-points concept as the oversized greeting card: In his movie's case, that means he piles on about eight half-baked romantic subplots, hoping they'll miraculously accumulate into one big plot.

Hugh Grant plays a new British prime minister in the romantic comedy Love Actually.

If only.

Curtis shovels on unrequited love, puppy love, love on the rocks, unlikely love, love interrupted by death, fraternal love, professional love, international love and love that crosses class lines. He gives us lovesick men, horny women, shy guys, silently suffering wives and eager youths. And he bastes them all in sap, structuring Love Actually by counting down the weeks until Christmas. Awww.

Nearly all of the subplots are flimsy and shallow. Perhaps most disappointing is the one featuring Hugh Grant as the new British prime minister who develops a crush on the young Cockney woman (Martine McCutcheon) who serves him his tea. Grant has had a sex scandal, so I suppose he has some political qualifications for the role, but his clueless character comes off as less equipped to govern than Arnold Schwarzenegger. Grant reinvigorated his career with the mean streak of his Bridget Jones's Diary and About a Boy characters, but now he's back to doing his annoying, aw-shucks stammering. And, even taking movie creative license into account, the way the "tea lady" simply barges into the PM's office and drops off official documents along with his pekoe and biscuits is just baffling. (Is she an executive secretary, too?)

There's also recent widower Liam Neeson advising his 11-year-old son (Thomas Sangster) about the boy's crush, in supercute scenes that make you long for Courtship of Eddie's Father reruns. Meanwhile, Emma Thompson plays a wife and mother who finds a boxed gold necklace that she thinks her husband (Alan Rickman) will be giving her, only to find out it's for his flirty secretary (Heike Makatsch). And Colin Firth plays a jilted writer who scrambles off to France and while there falls for his Portuguese housekeeper (Lucia Moniz), even though neither speaks the other's language. And so on.

Ironically, there's also one couple that's supposed to spoof the phoniness of movie relationships. They're two increasingly scantily clad stand-ins for a sex scene at a movie shoot, and their perfectly pleasant conversation contrasts with the intimate sex acts they're miming so a camera crew can rehearse. Typical of Love Actually, though, the action regularly cuts to this couple for a while; then they disappear for half the movie before suddenly reappearing. Also, typically, their eventual romance is as convincing as Grant's politician.

At least there's some genuine comic relief to be had. The story also occasionally follows Bill Nighy, who plays a washed-up rock star (not unlike the one he played in 1998's Still Crazy) who records a cheesy Christmas version of the Troggs' "Love is All Around" (in which "Christmas" replaces "love" and "come on and let it show" becomes "...let it snow." The guileless singer then promotes his new single on radio and TV with a candor that repeatedly makes his manager cringe.

Curtis—who first made his mark as cowriter of Rowan Atkinson's TV series Black Adder and Mr. Bean—also enlists Atkinson for an amusing cameo as, naturally, a very annoying man.

Despite the sporadic genuine laughs, most of the time Love Actually tries to be funny and sweet, and the result is phony cheer, culminating in a dreaded multiple happy ending featuring two separate mad dashes in which characters race to tell loved ones how they feel. Curtis' greatest success was his script for the very amusing Four Weddings and a Funeral, and he has said that this time around he was motivated to do something more complex than that and his similar Notting Hill. I guess that explains why, not 15 minutes into Love Actually, he cuts back and forth between a wedding and a funeral. It's that kind of shameless movie. iB

Love Actually ★★

Written and directed by Richard Curtis. With Hugh Grant, Emma Thompson, Colin Firth, Alan Rickman, Laura Linney, Liam Neeson and Bill Nighy. Rated R. Universal Studios.

New Releases

Intolerable Cruelty ★★★
It's "Coen Brothers lite" in a way, as The B Lebowski brothers have revised a pre-existing scrip for their latest and co-produced it with Brian Graze (A Beautiful Mind). But even if the absurdity onl occasionally hits the Coens' usual pitch (especiall during a hilarious trial scene), this fast-paced battle of-the-sexes comedy is still very funny. Georg Clooney is just right as a vain divorce attorney wit no conscience—no one else today can do a movi star turn as he can—while curvaceous Catherin Zeta Jones keeps right up with him as the golddigg who turns out to be his match in more ways tha one. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Kill Bill—Vol. 1 ★★
Before the first few minutes of Volume 1 Quentin Tarantino's long-awaited action epic- the second half arrives in February—you get th circa-1970 Shaw Brothers' "Shawscope" logo fro the team's old martial arts films, the swirly circ 1970 "Our Feature Presentation" intro movie th aters used to show, a circa-1970 Klingons refe ence and a taste of the circa-1970 Ironside them song. This instantly goes to show that Tarantin style, cool and clever a decade ago, is now only adventurous as an episode of VH1's I Love the '70 Make that VH1 with literal geysers of bloo Tarantino's story is a revenge tale with Uma Thu man as a modern-day warrior seeking revenge the assassins who left her for dead. The po cultural quotes come fast and hard—spaghe westerns, manga, Tarantino's own Reservoir Do etc.—so much so that you wish he would just se tle down and let his characters and words do the jobs, as in the movie's best sequence, when th warrior enlists a philosophical Okinawan swo maker (Sonny Chiba). Let's hope the second ha has more stretches like that. (At Boston Commo Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Lost in Translation ★★★½
Sofia Coppola dealt with shared pain in her 20 directorial debut, The Virgin Suicides, and she co jures up a similar funny-sad tone in her tale of t Americans (Bill Murray, Scarlett Johansson) adr in Tokyo. He's a washed-up movie star making bundle endorsing Japanese booze; she's the wife a work-consumed photographer (Giovan Ribisi). They're staying at the same hotel a killing time at the same hotel bar, and their mise loves company. The characters make a great mo couple, although their relationship is platon (with its share of sexual tension). Murray give Buster Keaton–like, sad-clown performance bu mainly around physical and especially facial rea tions to absurd situations, and Johansson is a lit heartbreaker. (At Boston Common, Harva Square and suburbs.)

Matchstick Men ★★★
If it's a Nicolas Cage movie, the more neuroses t better. He follows his self-loathing writer fr Adaptation with an obsessive-compulsive neatn in Ridley Scott's comedy. Cage's con man ca function if there's a speck on the carpet, and thinks that initiating a relationship with the year-old daughter (Alison Lohman) he's nev seen might help. The intertwining of his prof sional life with his strained attempt at fatherho makes for some amusing moments, as does Cag trademark twisted emotionalism. (At Cop Place and suburbs.)

Mystic River ★★
Where are Robert Mitchum and The Friends of Ed Coyle when you need them? Clint Eastwood's ad tation of Dennis Lehane's novel would like to be same sort of somber, blue-collar crime story as th 1970s Boston-shot classic. But this disappointme is plodding and literally and figuratively murky. Ea wood assembles a great cast whose efforts don't ways pay off, especially Sean Penn, whose charac Jimmy, suffers most from the loss of the novel's ba ground detail. Kevin Bacon and Tim Robbins p the other two childhood friends whose fates beco intertwined anew when Jimmy's daughter is m dered—one is the detective investigating the cri and the other is the prime suspect. As a whodu this is competent enough, but its ambitions larger than that, and its reach exceeds its grasp. Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Out of Time ★★½
Nearly a decade ago, director Carl Franklin a star Denzel Washington made Devil in a B Dress, an evocative 1940s-set neo-noir should have launched a series featuring aut Walter Mosley's hero, "Easy" Rawlins—if only diences hadn't been so indifferent. Franklin a

Washington's new collaboration is another thriller involving sex, money and deceit. This one is competent but much less layered and much more conventional. (I guess the generic title is a tip-off.) Washington plays a small-town police chief who's about to be divorced from one woman (fellow cop Eva Mendes) and is sleeping with another, married woman (Sanaa Lathan). A splashy crime involving the lover and a trail of evidence incriminating the chief perk the attentions of the fellow cop, and the chief has to scurry to clear his name. There are a few thrills, but there's also a ridiculously sunny ending. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Pieces of April ★★★
Black humor and optimism blend surprisingly well in this story of the title character (Katie Holmes) fixing Thanksgiving dinner for her visiting family. While she deals with kitchen problems in her Manhattan apartment, like finding a neighbor who'll let her use a stove after she realizes hers doesn't work, we also see the family (including dad Oliver Platt and ill mom Patricia Clarkson) trekking their way downstate to see her. The feeling of dread is mutual for the black-sheep daughter and her disappointed parents, and the colorful cast pulls off the heightened reality in writer-director Peter Hedges' story. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Prey for Rock and Roll ★
No rock and roll movie should ever take itself as seriously as this one does. Gina Gershon does her best "my way or the highway" Chrissie Hynde swagger as an aging singer-songwriter still chasing her musical dream, and the songs aren't half bad. But when the music stops—and that's most of the time—this wallows in over-the-top melodrama. (At Kendall Square.)

Runaway Jury ★★★
The latest John Grisham adaptation is a fun popcorn thriller, with Gene Hackman's cynical jury consultant stealing the movie. Hackman and his minions' appetite for jury members' dirty secrets—all the better to twist their arms with—would do J. Edgar Hoover proud. John Cusack and Rachel Weisz are in on the fun, too, as one person in the jury and one outside the jury who've teamed to sway the votes to the highest bidder in a high-profile case against gun manufacturers. As the crusading plaintiff's attorney, Dustin Hoffman has the left-out look of a teetotaler at happy hour. The movie occasionally acts like Hoffman's character too, especially during its earnest last few scenes, but this courtroom drama zips by. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Rundown ★★
The Rock still makes a great action leading man, and the movie sets up his character here with a blistering prologue. But the main plot, set in the Amazon and sending the Rock after wayward rich kid Seann William Scott (who does not come off well here) just isn't that involving. Having Christopher Walken around as the bad guy helps, but this is one of those weak "when in doubt, blow something up" action movies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

School of Rock ★★★½
Jack Black has the big-screen breakthrough he's been destined for ever since his scene-stealing role in High Fidelity, as a failed rock-and-roller who impersonates a substitute teacher and schools his fourth-graders to be his new band. Writer Mike White, who also plays a supporting role, tailored the story to Black's manic talents, and he and director Richard Linklater (Dazed & Confused) take what could have been a lame David Spade or Rob Schneider movie and made a very funny, genuinely feel-good movie. So, the next time one of those painful movies starring a Saturday Night Live cast member comes out, remember it didn't have to be so bad. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Singing Detective ★★
If it ain't broke, don't fix it. So why this two-hour adaptation of Dennis Potter's deeply involving seven-hour 1980s miniseries? Naturally, much of the drama gets dulled by the abridgement of Potter's tale of a writer trapped in the hospital by a debilitating case of psoriasis. In its full-strength form, it's an intoxicating mix of present-day action, the detective story reeling inside the writer's head (which casts him as a glib gumshoe), surreal hallucinations (usually involving Potter's trademark device of characters lip-synching to old tunes) and childhood flashbacks revealing the writer's emotional scars. Potter wrote the screenplay before his 1994 death, so it touches upon his main points, but there isn't a single aspect in which the movie matches up to its miniseries predecessor. (At Copley Place and Harvard Square.)

Catherine Zeta-Jones plays a use-'em-and-lose-'em woman who meets her match in Miles (George Clooney) in Intolerable Cruelty.

The Station Agent ★★★
This comedy about a dwarf (Peter Dinklage) who moves into an abandoned train depot in a small New Jersey town might have been a cloyingly quirky indie film. Instead, it's a pretty special experience. Dinklage's deadpan performance as Fin wryly captures how his character's expectations of his fellow man have been pounded down by their reaction to his height. Broader comedy comes from Bobby Canavale, as a food-truck owner who tries to befriend Fin and Patricia Clarkson as a woman escaping a fizzled marriage whom Fin tries to befriend. There's a wise and endearing clash of humanity here, and an unpredictable story to go along with it. Along with Pieces of April (see above), another brittle yet funny Clarkson performance. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

The Texas Chainsaw Massacre ★
Just rent the original. It has more frights and fewer clichés than this unnecessary remake. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Veronica Guerin ★★

The Rufus on Fire

Rufus Wainwright rises from a drug-riddled abyss to reclaim his operatic pop ambitions

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Facing his 30th birthday, Rufus Wainwright realized he needed to make some changes in his life, and getting a shorter haircut was "just the tip of the iceberg."

"I was like Frankenstein's laboratory for a while," the Canadian singer-songwriter says of the indulgent, hard-partying lifestyle he took up in the wake of his 2001 album, Poses. The openly gay pop eccentric experimented with such drugs as acid, alcohol, cocaine, ecstasy and crystal meth (the last of which fueled some anonymous sexual exploits) before he suffered an emotional breakdown and spent a month in rehab.

"Life in general is pretty tough for most folks, and one can spend a lot of time—especially in show business—thinking that applause or money or a glass of wine will fix the problem," says Wainwright, who plays Avalon Nov. 16. "But you have to face your demons, especially when you're dipping into them so many times for your inspiration. You can't really fool around in that area without being scathed."

Rufus Wainwright follows up 2001's Poses with the new Want One and the upcoming Want Two Wainwright has come out the other side with not one, but two CDs, the just-released Want One and its counterpart, Want Two, which is planned for release early next year.

Want One presents rich, finely sculpted pop masterpieces, ranging from the lovely piano-and-vocal solo piece "Pretty Things" to grandiose orchestral arrangements with strings, horns and as many as 350 vocal parts on songs like "Oh, What a World" and "Vicious World."

"I just wanted to do that because I've always been a big fan of Brian Wilson's work," Wainwright says from his New York apartment. "Especially on a song like 'Vicious World,' that's a tip of the hat to him."

Wainwright's songs also reflect his affinity for cabaret, Tin Pan Alley and classical music. "I still mainly listen to opera, or go to the opera a lot," he says. "The opera for me is very much somewhere where I can turn off my own criticism of stuff, and really just let myself go."

Composing provides another outlet. "For me, writing is definitely a type of medication," Wainwright says. "I saw an opportunity to create a certain arc for this record, 'cause I knew I had a whole bunch of songs from when I was seriously using [drugs], and songs from when I needed to find a way out, and that I should definitely figure out how to write not under the influence. I was a little worried about whether the newer songs would not be as interesting. But for me anyway, I dispelled that myth. Any artist who goes through that kind of transition has to establish that, and some artists don't, and that's a nightmare I didn't want to live."

Tucked beneath the bright veneer of some songs on Want One are lyrics that hint at Wainwright's drug-addled travails, in lines like "Stop me falling down, stop me making movies of myself" and "Guardian angels who left me stranded/It was worth it, feeling abandoned/Makes one hardened, but what has happened to love?"

"I definitely kept the utter descent and broken-glass sections to myself," he says of the sessions with producer Marius deVries, music director from the Moulin Rouge soundtrack, which included Wainwright. "It's in the lyrics and the songs, but I didn't bring it into the studio."

"Dinner at Eight" also exposes raw feelings left from the divorce of his parents, folk luminaries Kate McGarrigle and Loudon Wainwright III, noting how his father left him "long ago, actually in the drifting white snow."

"When I told him I was going to do this, I said, 'Well, I'm sorry Dad, it's a bit of an intense song,'" Wainwright says. "But he said, 'Rufus, I've written so many songs about so many people, I probably deserve it.'"

"I've hung out a lot with Sean Lennon, and at least my father's alive," he says. "Even though my parents weren't as famous as [John Lennon and Yoko Ono], they were spared some of the excesses and psychological turmoil that major fame brings. So our family did stay intact in the end."

Want One includes contributions from McGarrigle and Wainwright's sister, Martha, who sings in Wainwright's live band. Guitarist Teddy Thompson, son of Richard Thompson, also plays on the disc.

On tour, there's also a chance Wainwright will preview more extreme material from Want Two, such as "Gay Messiah," a song that's already causing a buzz for its risqué lyrics, though it's not about him.

"In putting out this first record, I didn't want one single strike against it. I wanted it to be available to more people, so I sort of toned down the subject matter," he says, adding of the shift from one record to the other, "I lead you all down this beautiful trail to a valley, and then there's a cliff." Cheers™
TM & © 2003 Paramount Pictures
Faneuil Hall Marketplace

Offering Three Different Rooms:

The Stage Bar and Café has the replica of the Hollywood set built by Paramount Pictures.

The Lower Bar resembles the bar at the Bull & Finch Pub on Beacon Hill that inspired the setting of the TV series.

Sam's Café was named after the Cheers character, Sam Malone, the Red Sox relief pitcher bar owner on the TV series.

Or use all 3 rooms for a party for up to 480 guests

An ideal place for

- Breakfasts
- Luncheons
- Cocktail Receptions
- Dinner Parties
- Late Night Parties

Making His Mark

DJ and producer Demarkus Lewis spins the house

Demarkus Lewis doesn't simply play house music—he creates his own. A native of Dallas, Texas, Lewis has enjoyed a groundswell of global recognition over the past year for his work as both a DJ and a producer. On "In Da Musik," a standout track from his Pandemonium EP on Alluv Recordings, released earlier this year, Lewis samples a soft and gentle British voice: "Alright, see, I want to tell you about acid. I'm not talking about tablets or any kind of drug, see, I'm going to tell you what I know. It's music. Alright? The acid is in the music. It is music." The term "acid" has always had a lot to do with the soul of house music, and Lewis uses the sample to explain how acid, house and soul all fit together as one.

On Sunday, Nov. 16, Lewis brings his uniquely deep brand of house music grooves to Bump at Phoenix Landing in Cambridge. Crowds may have thinned at some of Boston's bigger club nights during recent months, but the underground house music scene has continued to heat up. From the jazz-inflected sounds of the West Coast to the tough beats of Chicago and the tribal rhythms of Portugal, Bump covers the full spectrum of house music. "It's sleek, sexy, deep-down and dirty," says promoter Randy Deshaies. "We're putting the fun back in funk."

Phoenix Landing, 512 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-576-6260). Nov. 16, 10 pm–1 am. Free before 10 pm, $5 after. 19+. —Daniel Spurling

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

Bread & Circus Symphony

It was around 3:15 on Saturday afternoon, Oct. 11. You were behind me in line at the register in Bread & Circus. We looked at each other and smiled a couple times. You were wearing a white shirt with stripes. You had a great smile, and my heart was pounding wildly. I wanted to ask you for a cup of coffee, but I was in a rush to watch the Sox game and too nervous to even turn around to look into your eyes again until you went to a different direction. I was the girl holding an American flag. I would love to see you again.

Jeremy from Brookline

I met you Oct. 17, outside Natalie's. My friend thought you would be perfect for me, so she brought you outside to meet me. I was waiting in her car, and was completely thrown off guard. You had dark hair and a phenomenal smile, and all I know is that your name is Jeremy and your friends were in a rush to get going. I should have asked for your number, but missed my chance. If you remember me at all, write to me.

Smitten with P-Town Vixen

I'm looking for the one that got away Oct. 18 at the Pied Bar in P-Town at the end of Women's Week. You are a sultry eyed, cat-faced beauty who resembles Shalom Harlow with dark, curly hair. I believe you said your name was Victoria and you were there with a guy with blond hair. I was the dark-haired minx in red. Your eyes flirted with me and I took the invitation. We danced together, then later I worshiped your loveliness from below while you were up on the box. If you're reading this, your eyes haunt me, I can't stop thinking of you and I'd love to do more than dance again, so write. I remember what the blond guy's name is, so tell me and I'll know it's you. And if anyone else thinks they know my elusive vixen, please pass this along.

Cool City B

You: a tall, devastatingly handsome, "associate." Me: totally in love with you. Thank you for supporting me over the last five months of training hell. You are the best roommate, companion and friend ever. I am so lucky to have you in my life. And if no one else ever gets a single one of our jokes—it's comforting to know that we will still walk away laughing together. I love you tremendously.

—SMAY

Spiky, Dykey Girl on the No. 88 Bus

I see you get on at odd hours on the stop near Sycamore, and you always exit at Davis Square. Sometimes you have a frown in your changing-color eyes, but that can't reflect your real nature; I can only assume that you work for a psycho hose-beast boss. I know that your true nature is warm and snuggly, like the fabulous sweaters you wear. Won't you let me buy you a Pepsi?

Chance Encounter Long Shot

Well, this is quite a long shot, but what is there to lose? You: the Los Angeles man from the Ritz, lost on Stuart Street on Oct. 20 around 8 pm. You and your daughter (Amanda?) were coming from the Ritz—Boston Common, where you were staying, looking for Stuart Street and Legal Seafood. We met at the corner of Boylston and Tremont (where there are no street signs) and I offered directions because you both looked lost. You were in Boston with your daughter, who was scouting colleges, namely, Emerson, Harvard, BU and Brown. You both told me of your awful experience at the "Shining" Hotel in Seekonk—no rooms were available in Providence. Since you were from LA, you were surprised at the double parking and lack of street signs in Boston, but commented that the people are friendly. We usually are. I was alone, and on my way for a bite to eat at the Rock Bottom Brewery, and almost asked you both to join me to continue our conversation about the benefits of college in Boston, and to tell you what a great city this is. I think you both might have accepted the invite, which I regret not extending. Well, chance encounter, you seemed very nice, were handsome, with a good sense of humor, had a good rapport with your daughter, and appeared to be a single dad? At least, I didn't notice a ring. If you are unattached and interested, please respond.

Thank You, "Happily Employed"

Reading the venomous pronouncements heaped upon "The Great Triumvirate of Insurance Dunces" (Oct. 22 issue) made my chilly ol' heart swell and throb with joy. It's always a fine day when someone utilizes the Impersonals for what they are meant for. If I read one more lame-ass whining message to that Special Someone who Shared a Special Moment on the T (in a bar, restaurant, Filene's Basement, White Hen Pantry, take your choice) I will surely cry. Readers: Please take advantage of this tasty little outlet for indulging the dark side that we all have. You'll feel better and goddammit, so will I.

—Happily Annoyed

Entranced

I saw you across the row from me at the R-rated hypnotist Oct. 23 and you were with a girl you hardly spoke to. I was the girl he picked out from the audience to be the target. You got up on stage. You were such a good sport. I wanted to give you my number then but was too hypnotized. Hope to hear from you.

Brian the Marine (from the Kells)

Brian, I'm really sorry if I scared you off. I had such a great time talking to you all afternoon that Sunday that I kind of jumped the gun and probably freaked you out by calling too much (both while you were away in Maine and after you returned). Keep in mind it's been a really long time since I've been out on a date with someone new I think that everything about you is incredibly sexy and I can't get you out of my mind: your body, your South Shore accent, your incredible determination and desire to protect our country. I admire what you do and I wish that you and I had more time to get to know each other. Oh, and by the way...if you have time before you leave, stop by my bed for a nightcap, will you? You know the number. Good luck in California!

B Line Angel

I saw an angel on Oct. 25. You and I both got on a Green Line B train at Government Center station around 5:30 pm. I was on my way home after a long, hard day at work. Just when I thought there would be no bright spot in my day, I saw you! The instant I saw you and your bright eyes, everything else around me disappeared. You are a stunning petite girl, brunette, with light skin and bright eyes. It looked like you were coming home from a day of shopping. We looked at each other and smiled a couple of times. I would have introduced myself, but the train was (as the B Line always is) too crowded for me to get near you. You got off at one of the stops near Boston University. If my B Line angel is out there, please contact me so I can find out if your heart and soul are as beautiful as you are!!

SCORPIO OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

More than the five other signs that make up the rare Grand Sextile, yours is the one we'll all be watching, especially during the total lunar eclipse on the 8th. Until then, whatever drama has been building since the Scorpio new moon would benefit from a colleague's or a financial adviser's insights. Ask and ye shall receive. Total immersion in water while your Mars co-ruler is in Pisces could cool you out on many levels—emotional, spiritual and psychic—and may lead to a sudden outpouring of artistic creativity.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

As above, so below. The six-pointed star, the Seal of Solomon, the Grand Sextile consisting of two grand trines—one in water signs, the other in earth—suggests something monumental is about to take place on this plane. What will the Seer see? Because your Jupiter ruler is at the top of the configuration, in your Virgo midheaven, any vision you may have of a future world, your place in it and your family should be recorded immediately. Whether or not it comes to pass could be the bedtime story you'll tell your grandchildren.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Twice blessed, or is that thrice? Being a Goat is not always easy, but this autumn you're in the enviable position of having two guardian angels. Chiron, the wounded healer and teacher in your sign, is one; all-knowing, protective Jupiter in health-conscious Virgo is the other. Meanwhile, because your Saturn ruler is in Cancer, your cosmic complement, your partner probably has your best interests at heart, even if he/she won't admit it. Take the initiative in a financial matter, but try to wait until the eclipse is over.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

With so much planetary interaction, so many signs hooking up with each other, you might not notice that Uranus, your ruling planet, is getting ready to come out of retrograde. Right now you may feel that you're marking time, stuck on pause, but once Uranus flips, your life can switch into fast-forward really fast. Try to maintain an emotional or intellectual distance, but be prepared to shift focus, attitude and positions when the need arises. More than one opportunity may suddenly arise and surprise you.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

If you would only stop picturing yourself in alternative situations and focus instead on the obvious, the opportunity that's right before your eyes, you can probably make significant strides. Except for challenges to your Neptune ruler that are activating your imagination, and paranoia, everything in the heavens is indicating "go." Ambitious, energetic Mars in Pisces is the driving force, and it's getting reliable financial and emotional support from the other water signs. Even the earth signs are greasing your path.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Knowing which route to take, which stream leads to your ultimate destination, can be tricky when you're given very different choices. Enthusiasm may be intoxicating, but the tried-and-true alternative will probably serve you best in the long run. While your Mars ruler is in a double sign like the Fish, you've got to trust your intuition and hope that you don't become distracted by yet another tempting sexual attraction. For the next two weeks, lovey-dovey Venus and horny Mars are into their bag of no-good tricks once again.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

This year's Taurus full moon is a major, multifaceted total eclipse, an integral part of the Harmonic Concordance, which shouldn't be confused with the Harmonic Convergence of 1987. Although Luna won't reach perfection until November 8, you may sense its significance building well before then. On a less cosmic, more human scale, if you're not involved in a crucial partnership matter and there are no secretive Scorpio-like maneuverings going on, how about celebrating your recent good fortune and/or a happy love life?

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

A once-in-a-couple-of-millennia event like the Harmonic Concordance will no doubt have an effect on everyone. But you might be relieved to learn that the Twins may be able to slip through the Gordian knots of cosmic complication because your Mercury ruler is not one of the six planets that make up the Grand Sextile alignment. Feel free to continue pursuing whatever currently intrigues you, knowing full well that you'll have to be a sounding board for the Pisces, Cancers, Scorpios and Virgos who are about to freak out.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

If you remind yourself that only good results will come from the enormously productive Grand Trine between Saturn in your sign, the Scorpio sun and energetic Mars in Pisces, you might avoid being overwhelmed by feelings of omnipotence. Repeat three times: I am not Dear Leader. Since the Moon child is especially responsive to anything that concerns your ruling "light," make sure you're in a good place emotionally during the total lunar eclipse the evening of the 8th, and also that you're nowhere near an air sign given to ranting and raving.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Don't invest too much of yourself in wishful thinking or in a partner whose vivid imagination could lead you down the primrose path. Delusional Neptune in your marriage house is very active right now, and that emphasis might make you misinterpret the bigger picture coming into focus at the full moon/lunar eclipse. There's money to be made if you can keep your ego out of the equation, and if you let public opinion develop naturally, without applying your usual spin. Have faith that prosperous Jupiter in your money house will protect your funds.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Yin is where it's at. All the earth and water signs, the so-called negative or feminine signs, are the ones pulling the strings this week. Stick to your own kind and you're liable to be amazed at the amount of support you'll be showered with. You already know that earth signs are easy to hang with, but trusting an emotional and often elusive water sign to be a reliable source of comfort may take some doing. Since this is the best time in eons to reach out, to let the world know what's on your mind and in your heart, why not do it?

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

None of the transiting planets are currently in Libra, so you can probably sidestep the personal dramas leading up to the full-moon eclipse. Concentrate instead on the awesomeness of the unusual planetary configuration being hailed as the Harmonic Concordance. Six supportive sextiles will offer lots of opportunities, especially to the Bulls, Crabs and Scorpions in your life, but if you don't want to become involved, just say no. Trust that the cosmic forces are keeping your funds secure and your secrets secret.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

DOUBLE YOUR PLEASURE, DOUBLE YOUR FUN...

What's better than hearing one of the world's great sopranos in Symphony Hall? Hearing two of the world's great sopranos in Symphony Hall. Proving that sometimes too much of a good thing still isn't enough, the FleetBoston Celebrity Series opening night concert featured opera supernova Marilyn Horne and Tony and Grammy winner Barbara Cook performing selections from the American songbook.

The black-tie evening, which began with an elegant cocktail reception and dinner, attracted the likes of co-chairs Caroline Collings and Peter Wender; Huntington Theatre head Nicky Martin with Broadway star Nathan Lane; Boston Ballet artistic director Mikko Nissinen; art dealers Terry and Judy Vose; arts patron Lee Day Gillespie; gorgeous blonde investment banker Dyan Goodwin and her other half, Rob Serio; Talbot's CEO Arnold Zetcher and his fashion-plate wife, Ellen; fashion designer Alfred Fiandaca and the devastatingly handsome Scott Rixford; ubiquitous party pair Edgar Knudson and Louis Mula (just back from somewhere warm and relaxing); Copley Plaza doyenne Peggy Dray; and various other operazzi.

Following the performance, there was dessert and dancing (a first), and the VIPs got a chance to rub elbows with the remarkably down-to-earth divas. In fact, the only downside to the evening was that they upped the ante so high that next year's opening night crowd will be expecting the Three Tenors.

HOW MUCH IS THAT SOFA IN THE WINDOW?

Do you:

a) Subscribe to one or more magazines devoted to beautifying the home?

b) Experience frequent and persistent interior envy?

c) Often find yourself tuning in to one of those TV shows where a dumpy-looking room is fabulously transformed by a team of annoyingly chirpy decorators?

If you answered yes to any of the above, you would have enjoyed the first annual Walk About Boston's Design District to benefit the Massachusetts College of Art.

Guests were issued passports to carry with them as they toured high-style furniture showrooms Repertoire, Kartell, Landry & Arcari, Shoomine, Adesso, Montage and The Morson Collection, and everyone who received a stamp from all of the stores became eligible to win raffle prizes worthy of a Price Is Right showcase.

After all that walking around, it was high time for a glass of wine and a few little nibbly things (courtesy of Davio's) while a DJ spun some groovy tunes in the atrium of 10 St. James Ave. Present and accounted for: sexy contemporary furniture mogul Rick Garofalo; Channel 5 investigative reporter Jorge Quiroga and his unstoppable firecracker of a wife, Barbara; nattily dressed restaurateur Steve DeFilippo of Davio's; Iranian fabulon Fabby Abbasi of Shoomine; interior designer and Dudley Do-right doppelganger Duncan Hughes; soft-spoken style setter Paul Niski; bubbly MIT bigwig Martha Ballard and her other half, Steve Matthews; Mass. Art head honcha Kay Sloan; Gallic force of nature Francoise Theise of Adesso; gallery owners Rob Clifford and Jim Smith, and one guest who said, "It's too bad they weren't serving drinks earlier—I might've bought that glass coffee table."

CORE CURRICULUM

They could have called it How to Host a Wing-Ding 101 and charged tuition when the Boston Center for Adult Education threw its Ultimate Dinner Party fund-raiser.

Like all great dinner parties (ultimate or otherwise), it boasted an impressive guest list that included the likes of co-chairs Sandy Krakoff and Lois Kunian and their adoring husbands, Robert and Stephen; author and Globe columnist Alex Beam; best-selling novelist Andre Dubus III and his gorgeous wife, Fontaine; marketing grande dame Irma Mann; Channel 5 GM Paul LaCamera and the delectable Mimi; right-brain/left-brain couple Denise and Ari Nachmanoff; the super-groovy Maura Connolly and John Egan; Back Bay nabobs Lois and Norman Silverman; publishing titan Nader Darehshori; velvet-voiced radio personality Ron della Chiesa and his scrumptious wife, Joyce; eminent M.D. Jordan Ruboy; charity stalwarts Nancy and Joseph Serafini; and so on and so forth.

Guests gathered at the Ritz-Carlton for cocktails and then dispersed to some of the finer homes in the Back Bay and Beacon Hill for intimate dinner parties, like the visually spectacular Moroccan feast held on the floor of a ballroom on Commonwealth Avenue, or the elegant dinner with superior and beautifully decanted wines in a townhouse on Marlborough Street.

By the time dessert was served, everyone was feeling fat and happy, and had there been a final exam, the evening would have earned straight A's. IB

ALPHA OMEGA

An unassuming Brit. An abundance of incredibly smooth gin.
Two bars per square block. Boston, meet Simon.

Simon hails from Plymouth, England, and he brings with him a rather smooth gin indeed. It's a handcrafted 200-year-old recipe that calls for the sweeter "root" botanicals like orris root and angelica, and less juniper, which other distillers tend to rely on. Perhaps that's why Plymouth Gin received a "Double Gold" at the 2001 San Francisco World Spirits Competition. Simon feels it was deserving. After all, he thinks Plymouth Gin is the smoothest tasting gin in the world. Seek out our man Simon—he's no doubt strolling your streets as we speak—and taste his uniquely smooth gin for yourself.

FROM THE EDITOR

RATED XY

In October, our humor columnist and staff writer, Ezra Dyer, came up with the idea for a story called "Straight Eye for the Queer Guy" that would turn Bravo's popular reality show inside out. Ezra (who is straight) and some of his straight friends would give the IMPROPER's Jonathan Soroff (who is gay) and some of his gay friends a straight-guy makeover. They would school them in how to dress poorly, ogle women and behave crassly—in other words, stereotypical heterosexual-male behaviors.

It was one of those ideas that made us wonder why no one had done it yet—and a chance for our two resident wits to work together. Hoping to beat anyone else to the punch, we cleared a space in our feature lineup, and Ezra and Jonathan went to work setting up an itinerary and recruiting friends to participate. You can read the results of their experiment, which included taking a trip to the New England Dragway, tailgating with a tackle dummy and dining at Hooters, on page 20 of this issue.

Thankfully, the day seems to have had no long-lasting effects on Jonathan and friends William and Paul. (As we went to press, Reuters reported that Comedy Central will debut a show called Straight Plan for the Gay Man in February.)

There's more to make you laugh in Soroff's interview with our cover model, Burlington native Amy Poehler of Saturday Night Live (page 18), and in Andrew Graham's musings on holiday hangovers (page 30). Then, get serious about your holiday shopping list by checking out two separate features filled with gift ideas (pages 26 and 32)—some don't even require wrapping.

GOOD FUR NOTHIN'

On the cover of the Nov. 5 issue is a photo of a young woman snuggling in white fur. Inside, the magazine offers an article flaunting coats with fur ("It's a Wrap," page 36) and then devotes its "I on Style" column (page 40) entirely to fur.

We would like to ask, Would you show a photo of a model wearing dog fur? Cat fur? An endangered species' fur? Those animals' fur is certainly beautiful enough. Or is it that you will not show people wearing the skin and fur of a once-living animal if the animal is politically correct enough for your standards? Is that where your magazine draws the line for fashion?

We respectfully ask you to discontinue promoting such cruelty. There are plenty of alternatives to fur—please push them instead.

—STEVEN AND HELEN RAYSHICK
Barre

For years, we have embraced THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN as a conduit for progressive thought and a guidebook for the hip and chic. Based on the cover of the Nov. 5 issue, I guess we can therefore assume that the new hip style is fur. In one fell swoop, your magazine has managed to deconstruct its previous image.

The reality of the fur industry is a far cry from the fashion runways of London and Milan. Animals are routinely trapped in steel leg traps that leave them with broken appendages, waiting for days to die. Those animals raised on fur farms spend their time in cages too small to move around in and are left exposed to freezing conditions in order to bulk up their coats. Finally, they can look forward to a death based on crude methods such as anal electrocution or a gas chamber. Please make every effort possible to undo the harm you have done in promoting this cruel and heartless industry. The animals, and your readers, deserve better.

—BRADFORD STADLER

CORRECTIONS

The photo caption on page 62 of the Nov. 5 issue should have said that Julie White will star in the Huntington Theatre Company's upcoming production of Bad Dates.

The correct name of the drag queen pictured in Oct. 22's "Last Scene Here" column is Rainbow Frite, not Rainbow Brite. Our apologies to Ms. Frite.

A BOSTONIAN ANTHEM

With a resume that includes stints at Grill 23 & Bar, the Federalist and currently Azure, renowned chef Robert Fathman has had a blast developing the menu of comfort-food faves for Anthem, a palatial new restaurant near North Station. It's a pretty big departure for a guy who's more accustomed to preparing such delicacies as confit of loup de mer and sautéed sand dabs than Southern fried chicken salad, meatloaf and shrimp po' boys. At Anthem, he gets his hands dirty while "having a tremendous amount of fun" at the same time, he says. Fathman's much-anticipated dessert, the deep-fried Twinkie with berry coulis, has already been touted in nearly every publication in town (including this one) and has had some folks shaking their heads in dismay (and others drooling with anticipation).

The Briar Group (the experts behind a handful of Irish bars, as well as Azure and City Bar) opened Anthem in the former Commonwealth Brewing Company space in mid-October with a new decor and a totally new feel. Gone is the German beer hall–like atmosphere. It's now sleek and chic, with funky furniture, lush velour curtains and a dark mahogany bar. The downstairs, formerly the Downstairs Lounge, is now an extension of Anthem, offering cocktails and late-night fare. In the unlikely event that you're not happy with your meal, whether it be a fried egg sandwich or chicken fried steak (paired with a martini, of course), keep in mind the menu's disclaimer: "All items are quality food and therefore, whiners and cry babies will not be smiled upon!" 138 Portland St., Boston (617-523-8383). —Erin Hagedorn and Julie Suratt

HOOP DREAMS

Think your basketball skills deserve a better showcase than the plastic hoop stuck to the wall of your cubicle? If you and nine friends each pony up $350—or better yet, get your company to foot the bill—you can bring your crazy ups to the same court where the Celtics play. On Nov. 23 the Play on the Parquet tournament, a benefit for the Association for Retarded Citizens, lets schlubs like yourself suit up in the Celtics locker room with a jersey (each bearing a retired number—you can arm-wrestle over number 33) and play a 45-minute full-court game at the FleetCenter. The game is meant to replicate a real Celtics game, complete with play-by-play coverage, referees and Tommy Heinsohn screaming at players who don't dive for loose balls (we're kidding about that last one). Call 781-891-6270 to get in on the game.

Going, Going.... In other basketball news, Celtics legend Bob Cousy is auctioning his collection of basketball memorabilia online at www.sportscardsplus.com. The most prized items are a picture of the 1963 Celtics in the Oval Office signed by JFK, a 1957 championship ring, and a picture of the NBA's 50 Greatest Players—signed by 49 of them. At press time, the picture was already bid up to $30,000, but four citations from the city of Worcester (one of them naming Cous mayor for two days) stood at $165.—Ezra Dyer

ELISABETH HASSELBECK

It's been nearly three years since Elisabeth Hasselbeck (nee Filarsky) outwitted, outplayed and outlasted 12 contestants to land in the final four on the second season of CBS's Survivor. Since her stint in the Outback, the Boston College graduate and former Puma footwear designer has been busy. After Survivor, she signed on as host of the Style Network's The Look for Less and married her college sweetheart, Washington Redskins quarterback Tim Hasselbeck. Not bad for a 26-year-old. Now she's one of three finalists competing to fill Lisa Ling's shoes as a cohost on ABC's The View. This week, the Rhode Island native auditions for the role of fifth wheel with Barbara Walters and the queens of coffee klatch. Below she shares her views on lasting impressions, survivors and Mother Teresa.

IB: You were one of thousands to make Survivor and are one of the three finalists on The View. What's the secret to a good first impression?
EH: I wouldn't say that I have a secret. I just think that whatever I do, whether it's meeting someone for the first time or going to the grocery store, I try not to alter anything. I said it about Survivor and I'll say it about The View: I want to be right for the show. If it's not me, then I'm meant for something else.
IB: Do you keep in touch with anyone from Survivor?
EH: I keep in touch with Rodger Bingham from Kentucky. We've become dear friends and our families have become close because of us. Jeff Varner works out in L.A. so I see him every now and then, and I talk to Mitchell and Tina.
IB: How did you get the audition for The View?
EH: It's funny because two things were going on simultaneously. My brother was calling me four times a day after they announced they were looking for a new host for The View. He said, "Elisabeth, I think you should go for it." And at the same time, my agent was putting my demo out there. I actually spoke with one of the executive producers on the phone. We had a really great conversation, and he said he was going to give me a shot.
IB: Are you nervous about sharing the stage with Barbara Walters and company?
EH: Not nervous. I'm excited. Everyone's asking me what they're like and if they're nice. And they were nice, but they were also challenging. That's the kind of relationship I have with my friends. We like to challenge each other, and we all like to make our voices heard.

IB: Debbie Matenopoulos didn't fare so well on the original cast of The View. Do you have any fears about going in as the new girl?
EH: I don't really have any fears. I'm kind of just getting ready for the best and the worst. I might say something people don't agree with, and I better be sure I can back it up.
IB: If you get the job, who is your dream interview?
EH: Oh gosh. That's a good question. Maybe Barbara Walters herself. It's funny because when I was there the first time, my first interview was Hillary Clinton. Interviewing a senator—I don't know where it goes from there. I would love to have the opportunity to interview President Bush. And for someone of all time, I would have loved to sit for a moment with Mother Teresa. Just to talk to someone who was so selfless her whole life.
IB: Describe your typical visit to Boston?
EH: A typical weekend in Boston would definitely include seeing all of [my and my husband's] families. Going for a long run along the Charles and seeing one of my favorite people of all time, Father Neenan at BC. Maybe stopping for a little BC football game, and walking around Harvard Square or grabbing some frozen yogurt from Angora.

B. GOOD FOR YOU

Happy (and Healthy) Meal...An alternative to Au Bon Pain, Souper Salad and food courts is on the horizon. Longtime buddies Anthony Ackil and Jon Olinto are opening B.Good, a breakfast, lunch and dinner joint that promises healthful tasty meals without lengthy waits and high prices. The 48-seat diner is slated to open in a new building on Dartmouth Street in early December, and everything on the menu—from the burgers to the salads to the fries—will have nutritional information posted. "We're just regular people who can't find a good meal that doesn't have 100 grams of fat and make you feel awful," says Ackil. He expects the average check will run $7 and reports that everything will be made with all-natural ingredients. "We're not health freaks. I love McDonald's—I just don't like how I feel afterward." 131 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-424-5252).

Fragile Elements...It seems like just yesterday that we wrote about the opening of Elements in Arlington. It was actually June when chef Bill Flumerfelt assumed leadership of the suburban eatery previously known as Tea Tray in the Sky. Now, before even making a blip on the radar, Elements is no more. Despite Flumerfelt's culinary expertise, Elements couldn't stay afloat in the current bear market. RIP.

What's in a Name?...Those looking to grab a bite at Geoffrey's, the popular Back Bay breakfast bungalow, are out of luck. Seems management had a little falling out. One of the partners, Michael Aplin (who founded the restaurant in the South End with his life partner, Geoffrey Seelen), bid a not-so-amicable adieu, and the joint has been renamed Dartmouth Café (left). Speaking of name changes, George, the Boylston Street tavern formerly known as Rattlesnake, has rechristened the upstairs bar with its old moniker.

New Dim Sum...If you're like us, you're always on the lookout for dim sum, so we're happy to announce that Mass. Ave's pan-Asian restaurant Island Hopper now offers a dim sum weekend brunch. But don't expect to see the traditional carts wheeling around with steaming dumplings and egg tarts. Island Hopper's dim sum is à la carte from a special menu, so there's no preview of the goods. Items include steamed pork buns and sweet egg custard, and prices range from $1.75-$9.95 a dish. 91 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-266-1618). Sat., 11:30 am-3 pm; Sun., 12-3 pm.

Sunday Dinner...It's almost like dining with JFK and Jackie. History buffs with an appetite can sink their teeth into Camelot at Sunday Dinner at the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum. The buffet-style dinner at the museum isn't exactly four courses in the Kennedy Compound, but $40 ain't bad for panoramic views of the city skyline and plenty of grub by Gourmet Caterers. Dinner is served at one seating beginning at 4:45 pm in the Museum Pavilion, and Nov. 23 and Dec. 7 are the final dates. Show up early: Diners with reservations receive free admission to the museum between 9 am and 5 pm. Columbia Point, Boston (617-514-1586). $40.—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

LOCKS LESSON

Even as a beauty school graduate, I struggle to achieve the fresh-from-the-salon look that seems so effortless for the pros. But getting that look isn't hocus-pocus. Products and technique are the secret weapons of seasoned stylists, and practice makes perfect. New hair care products come out every day, and the only way to keep up on trends is to use them daily. Of course, it's best to learn from a pro. Mitchell John Salon offers 30-minute private training sessions with seasoned stylists who teach you two styles (one for daytime and one for evening) and recommend hair products. They'll even tell you how to perfect the hard-to-reach areas in the back. Lessons cost around $50—a small price to pay for a future of good-hair days. 67 Broad St., Boston (617-951-0122). —Samantha House

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Chain Gang...KISS 108 FM's Chain of Fools stunt drew to a close on Nov. 7, and 31-year-old Dana Gaughan of Waltham emerged $10,000 richer. The five men and five women who were chained to KISS morning show producer Lisa Roach and music director David Corey, respectively, endured 160-plus hours by each others' sides, including sleeping in a king-size bed and showering (G-rated) together. Each day the teams voted off one of their chainmates, and the public voted online for the final winner. After seven days attached at the hip, something juicy must have happened. "I have so many good stories," says Roach. On day four, Lisa and the boys ditched their scheduled day at the gym for manicures and then headed to Coyote Ugly. Eight shots apiece later, the group was down five pairs of boxers and a brassiere. Surprisingly enough, the chainees aren't all recent grads with time to kill. Two of the women are married with kids, and 3 of the men have girlfriends. Five men showering and sleeping with a strange woman? Wonder how that went over. "Oh, we won't even go there," says Roach.

Hoof It...For most of us, winter is the time of year when we go outside as infrequently as possible. However, there are those dedicated few who enjoy a brisk walk every now and then, which might explain the late-September release of the Appalachian Mountain Club's WalkBoston. The AMC outdoor achievers and tour guide publisher WalkBoston put together this guidebook of 30 scenic and historic walks through Boston neighborhoods. Each route was designed by a WalkBoston member and features step-by-step directions, time and level of endurance, and highlights historic landmarks. Jamaica Plain's greenways, Brookline's hill paths, the South End's brownstones and Roslindale Square are among the featured terrains. $14.95. www.outdoors.org.

Space Invaders...In a city where an 800-square-foot two-bedroom qualifies as spacious, it's easy to see why people ooh and ahh over storage space. StorageEvolutions, a recently launched property storage company, offers an alternative to renting a truck and hauling your gear to a cinderblock cubbyhole with an orange door. Director of operations and business development Brandon Najarian likens his service to Stop & Shop's Peapod. They'll help you pack up your items and then deliver them to a private storage bin in a Framingham warehouse. With a day's notice, they'll return stored items whenever you want them. It's a perfect solution for skis and boots, which take up valuable space in the warmer months. $29.99 a month and up. (877-551-4348). www.storageevolutions.com.

Gifted...The holidays are almost upon us, and this year, the Boston Public Library wants a piece of the action. The BPL now sells a line of holiday cards, clothing and other gifts that can be embellished with one of more than 350 images from the online gallery. Options include rare Victorian prints, images from 19th-century artist Louis Prang and vintage images from the 1903 World Series. —E.H., J.S. & J.I.

ZEKE SHOW

My roommate and I are subjects in a three-man kingdom

I ran into my next-door neighbor—we'll call him Elmer—in the hallway between our apartments recently. "You think Ezra's a bad name?" he asked rhetorically. Well, no, I actually like it quite well, I wanted to say, but before I could open my mouth Elmer continued, "Well, my family used to call me Zeke when I was growing up!" I wasn't sure how to respond to this information, so I said something along the lines of, "Is that right, Zeke?" Personally, I like the name Zeke. It conjures images of hillbillies, and I like hillbillies.

In my experience thus far, Elmer/Zeke is always friendly, unless you are somehow engaged in defying the Tao of Elmer. The tao is easy to figure out, since most of it is posted around the building's common areas on large, easy-to-read signs. Such as those in the laundry room.

Elmer presides over the laundry room, and his signs enforce order where there would otherwise be laundry anarchy. Elmer writes his signs with hyphens between each word, possibly on the theory that hyphens are too much fun to limit their use to adjectival compounds, such as "obsessive-compulsive." There are signs commanding launderers to throw only lint in the lint-specific trash can, to clean the lint screens after a load is done, to turn off the lights on the way out, not to leave detergent bottles on the table or they'll be thrown away, and to close the lid to the washer when it's not running (to-prevent-dust-from-entering-the-drum). Over the spigots for the washer's two water lines are the words "hot" and "cold," just in case the spigots' colors—red and blue—get confusing.

The other day I was in Elmer's Laundromat putting my laundry in the dryer and was shocked to discover that some Snuggle-wielding nihilist left a sheet of fabric softener in there. I thought of forging a sign in Elmer's trademark blue marker reading, "Remove-Snuggle-from-dryer-or-I-will-kill-you. I-am-watching," but figured that would only spawn another sign that read "No-unauthorized-posting-of-signs."

And Elmer is authorized as a manager-type person for our building. He has keys to my apartment and he's not afraid to use them. Shortly after we moved in, our apartment was repainted by a Tibetan guy. Apparently the Chinese took away his brushes, because his only tool was a roller and he didn't come within an inch of any corner, which gives the place an interesting two-tone look. I tell visitors that "shabby edges" is the latest interior decorating craze and it took me months to find a guy who knows how to do it. As might be expected from an absent-minded, avant-garde creative type, the painter left the lights on when he was done, which caused Elmer to swing into action with his "emergency" keys. Seeing that the lights were on in our apartment but the painter had left, Elmer let himself in and turned off the lights, then notified the management company that there had been a key-worthy incident. The building managers, in turn, were horrified, and suggested that perhaps Elmer should relinquish his keys before any other emergencies arise, like someone leaving the TV on.

I know about this situation because Elmer confronted me one day after work, explained what happened and offered to turn in his keys. I didn't want to take away Elmer's keys, because I really didn't care if he'd been in the apartment, and he seemed pretty repentant about the whole thing. After all, he'd probably saved us at least 25 cents in electricity, and I've got nothing to hide. My roommate, Scott, might've been upset if Elmer had walked in while he was inside practicing kung fu moves and wearing women's underwear, but as far as I know Scott doesn't even do that. I don't know why I even mentioned it.

At first I thought that Elmer's iron rule of the building's basement territory bordered on oppressive, but I've come to think of him as an arbiter of order in a chaotic universe. Inside Elmer's Laundromat, the light is always off when you arrive and the lint screens are always clean. The question is what will happen when we have a party, and eventually we will. It might be hard to stay on Elmer's good side with bass thumping through our paper-thin doors, even if we do adhere to the building's 10 pm quiet rule. I see only one solution: A party ain't a party till it includes a guy named Zeke. iB

Soroff ON

AMY POEHLER

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPHED BY GREG HENRY/LAMOINE PHOTO GROUP

Now in her third season as a cast member of Saturday Night Live, Burlington native Amy Poehler graduated from Boston College, where she was in an improv troupe called My Mother's Fleabag, and then moved to Chicago to pursue a career in comedy. After performing with Second City and ImprovOlympic, she joined the sketch comedy group Upright Citizens Brigade and moved with it to New York in 1996. The troupe had a TV show that ran on Comedy Central for three years, and it also opened its own theater. In addition to being a regular on SNL, Poehler has played recurring characters on Late Night with Conan O'Brien and Undeclared, and her film credits include Deuce Bigalow: Male Gigolo, Wet Hot American Summer, and Martin & Orloff. In her forthcoming film appearances, she stars opposite Jack Black and Ben Stiller in Envy, and opposite Alec Baldwin and Anthony Hopkins in The Devil and Daniel Webster. Recently married, she lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: So are Trix really for kids, or does the rabbit in that commercial have grounds for a discrimination suit?

Amy Poehler: Is this a thinly disguised drug reference, or what?

JS: Never mind. Were you a handful growing up?

AP: I was always a "Look at me!" kid. I'd spend a couple of hours putting together a routine and making everyone come out and watch me perform it in the driveway. I wasn't shy.

JS: Now that you're a big, huge star, what's the juiciest piece of gossip you've heard about yourself?

AP: I haven't. But sometimes I'll read the blind items in [the New York Post's] Page Six and pretend it's me they're talking about—y'know, the starlet with the drug problem?

JS: So how much rehearsal time do you guys get on SNL*?*

AP: The one thing people don't realize (or maybe they do after watching the show) is that it's so last-minute. On Monday, you meet the host and pitch ideas to them. Tuesday, you stay up all night writing. Wednesday, you read all the sketches, and they get picked. You rehearse Thursday and Friday, tape any taped pieces and rehearse any songs, and block a scene maybe once or twice. Saturday, you have a run-through, a dress rehearsal in front of a live audience, and then there's the live show. Sketches will be added on a Saturday. Or you can work on a sketch all week—there's a set and costumes—and then, after the dress rehearsal, at a meeting between 10:30 and 11:30, that sketch can go away. Lorne Michaels' quote is that the show airs because it's 11:30, not because it's ready. And that's what I love about it.

JS: Favorite guest host?

AP: Anyone who compliments me. If a host says something flattering, it's very easy to fall in love with them. We have all these glamorous movie stars who come in with beautiful skin, and we've all stayed up all night, and we're like, "I don't really like him or her." Then they walk by and say, "That was really funny," and they're instantly my new best friend.

JS: Tell me a guest-host horror story—someone who was a wicked big dink.

AP: People are usually too scared to be nasty. The interesting thing with the host is they're out of their element. You have these big stars used to controlling everything thrown into a show where they don't have very much control, working with people who have worked together for years, and they're asked to do things they don't normally do. If they surrender to it, they do great. It's people who try to come in and control the situation. Sometimes, an actor will say, "I can't really understand the motivation here," or use all these actor-y terms, and I'm like, "You mean you can't do it funny? Just read the f——g cue cards."

JS: So is Britney Spears really made out of marzipan?

AP: [Laughs.] You're not gonna get me to dig on celebrities.

JS: Then just give me one "Jeane Dixon Predicts," like, is Tori Spelling due for a big comeback?

AP: There are a lot of people I worry about in the world. Tori isn't one of them.

JS: Scariest Christopher Walken moment?

AP: He's really good at sitting there and not talking. Y'know how most people feel compelled to fill in the silence? He could just sit there forever and not talk, which shows either incredible discipline or that he's able to sleep with his eyes open.

JS: Ever seen Ben Stiller naked?

AP: God, no. You're not gonna get me on any of this.

JS: Is Jack Black the Orson Welles of our generation?

AP: [Laughs.] He's awesome. I love people who take some of the vanity out of comedy. You can always win my heart by doing a pratfall or walking around with a plate of spaghetti on your head. He just kind of barrels along in a way that I really like.

JS: You play his wife in a movie called Envy. Name one thing you envy.

AP: Just one? God! I envy people who automatically get up early. I can't quite figure it out, because it's a battle for me every morning. So I envy early risers, and I envy people who can speak another language, so they can more readily talk about other people while they're standing right next to them. I could go on. I envy people who can jog, and I think these might be the same people who are early risers and speak French, but they get up and run and sweat, and then just go about their day. It's shocking to me. I find that fantastic.

JS: Funniest thing you ever did or said onstage that your audience didn't get?

AP: Because they didn't hear it, or because they didn't understand? Can you imagine if I just rolled out 500 examples? "One time, I did a sketch on Love Canal and not a single person got it. Another time, I referenced this crazy tree that grows in Africa." [Laughs.] I've blocked all those horrible moments out.

JS: The thing you miss most about living in Boston?

AP: My family—and the Burlington Mall, which never fails to delight.

JS: In Deuce Bigalow, your character had Tourette's syndrome. If you really had it, what inappropriate thing would you love to be able to say?

AP: I'd want to comment on poor service. I've waited tables since I was 16, and it's true everywhere—in restaurants, at the airport—people are so f——g rude! And I'm sick of it. I believe myself to be an easy customer, but once in a while, I'd like to blurt out, "You should definitely be fired."

JS: You created the role of a one-legged dating-show contestant on SNL*. Any angry letters from one-legged women?*

AP: No. I'd like to think I've shown the world that one-legged women can be as trashy and despicable as everyone else.

JS: If you lived in a trailer park, what would you have in your front yard: a pink flamingo, a bathtub Mary, one of those reflective balls?

AP: No. I would probably have an old, broken-down tanning booth filled with used scratched tickets from the lottery, none of them winners, and miscellaneous baby effects, slightly burned from a fire, but nobody really knows the whole story.

JS: OK, that's deeply disturbing. You know what freaks me out? When you see a sneaker or a sweatshirt lying on the side of the highway. It's really ominous.

AP: [Laughing.] When you live in New York, the things you see on the street are amazing. You'll look down, and there's like a china plate, filled with chicken wings and a dirty sock. I'm like, "What the f——?!" It's so gross.

JS: OK, fill in the blank: On the whole, Amy Poehler would rather _____.

AP: Amy Poehler would rather you mind your own business. With three exclamation points. Just kidding. IB

STRAIGHT EYE for QUEER GUY

PHOTOGRAPHED BY RICHARD SMITH

Gay culture is in vogue, as the popularity of Queer Eye for the Straight Guy demonstrates. But every cultural movement needs a counterculture, and so we decided to flip the Queer Eye premise and let three card-carrying meatheads educate three stylish gay guys in some of the finer aspects of straight life. The itinerary: drag racing at New England Dragway; tailgating outside the Boston College–Notre Dame football game; and having dinner at that bastion of busty dining establishments, Hooters. Our goal: to demonstrate that straight life can be a pretty gay time if you know what you're doing. Here's the tale of our outing, as seen by each side. Let the high-octane, beer can–crushing, tobacco-chewing fun begin.

From top: A gourmet lunch, New England Dragway style; Murph outfits the gay boys in some stylish New England Dragway apparel; Murph declares you may only wear a bear fur coat if you have a matching beard; Jonathan wonders worriedly whether the tech inspector will allow a leather interior; Ezra attempts to explain what an engine is.

THE STRAIGHT EYE...

BY EZRA DYER

GASSING UP

Just after dawn on a Saturday in October, I pile into the car with straight-guy Murph and our (straight) photographer, Richard, and hit Route 93 North. Behind us are fellow IMPROPER writer Jonathan Soroff and his gay compatriots, William and Paul. We need to get an early start to fit in all the straightness we've got planned, which includes meeting up with our third straight, Millman, who awaits our arrival at the Boston College–Notre Dame game for some serious tailgating.

Our first destination is the New England Dragway in Epping, N.H. This weekend's theme is Import Wars—any import car is eligible to line up at the track's 4,000-foot strip of pavement to see what it'll do in the quarter-mile. Our car is the butch Infiniti M45, a midsize sedan that packs a V-8 making 340 horsepower—only 10 less than a Corvette. The M45 is fast enough to make your passengers sink their fingernails into the armrests. It's not trendy and it's certainly not "cute"—basically, it's the antithesis of a Beetle convertible with a daisy in the dashboard bud vase. The perfect car to drive in a straight line, as it were.

While the Infiniti is a straight-guy car through and through, my reference heterosexual male, Murph, displays a few characteristics of the rainbow tribe. But despite his Audrey Hepburn poster (see Jonathan's side of the story for further incriminating evidence), Murph chews tobacco, knows a lot about cars and harbors a well-documented affinity for Asian women. Plus, he has a beard.

Our two-car caravan makes a pit stop at a great little coffee shop in Newburyport called Dunkin' Donuts. There we begin our day the healthy straight way, with coffee and some breakfast sandwiches that make Kevlar seem tender. Murph and I chastise William, who orders the Dunkin' caramel latte instead of the "regular" with cream and eight tablespoons of sugar. I choke down a sausage, egg and cheese croissant to set a good dietary example for the gays. (I ordered it on a bagel, not a croissant, but what was I going to do, be a diva about it?)

MURPH CHEWS TOBACCO, KNOWS A LOT ABOUT CARS, AND HARBORS A WELL-DOCUMENTED AFFINITY FOR ASIAN WOMEN. PLUS, HE HAS A BEARD.

On the ride to Epping, Murph and I discuss manly things like snow-tire tread compounds while Richard suffers through our (OK, my) post-breakfast gastrointestinal distress. Richard, who is British, punctuates his frequent stabs at his window's down button with wry one-liners, such as "I hope the only skid marks are on the dragway" and "You're not a well man." When Murph recounts his recommendation to his father that he chew tobacco to relieve constipation—"Not only will you be able to go, you won't be able to stop!"—we laugh so hard we cry. I'm not sure our gay counterparts would also find this subject to be comedy gold.

We arrive at the track and wait in line for our tech inspection behind cars that are so fast they carry parachutes to slow down. I warn Jonathan that it might not be a good idea to ask the driver of one such vehicle if he can pack his chute after the races. While waiting, we evaluate my attire, which is intended to set the standard for our sartorially challenged friends. I'm wearing a flannel shirt, Bon Jovi concert T-shirt, Viagra NASCAR hat and wicked awesome tapered jeans. As William puts it, my look is "very 1995." William compliments Murph on his more stylish attire—a Syracuse sweatshirt and khakis—and Murph replies defensively, "These are the same clothes I wore yesterday." Recycling, we all agree, is a decidedly nongay trait.

After waiting several hours to get a tech inspector to certify that the car does have seatbelts and doesn't have anything more dangerous than New England Dragway concession food on board, we're ready to race.

As the cars filter to the line, I give designated dragger Paul a quick lesson in brake-torquing for a drag-race launch. When the light turns green, there's a whiff of tire smoke and he's off. It looks like a perfect launch, and when Paul returns with his time slip, I feel like a proud parent. He's run the quarter-mile in 14.26 seconds at 97 mph. Car and Driver lists the M45 at 14.5 seconds, and AutoWeek turned a 14.68 at 95 mph, so Paul has handily beat the published times for this car in his first try. You know what that means: Time for some brewskis!

TESTOSTERONE TEST

We arrive at Millman's BC tailgate party to find that "tailgating" is a loose description of what he's doing, given that he has no tailgate. Also, he's not exactly at the game, per se. He's sitting in a folding chair next to a cooler of beer on a lawn across from the campus on Comm. Ave., wearing fleece sweatpants and a sweatshirt. In his right hand is his cell phone—he's using it to listen to updates on the horse races at Saratoga. In his left are his off-track betting tickets, which he's checking for winners while attempting to guess the score of the BC–Notre Dame game based solely on the occasional waves of cheers that spill out of the unseen stadium. He's also drinking a beer, pausing every now and then to yell come-ons at every girl who happens to walk past. Paying attention to multiple sporting events while gambling, drinking beer and hitting on women: This is straight-guy multitasking at its finest.

PAYING ATTENTION TO MULTIPLE SPORTING EVENTS WHILE GAMBLING, DRINKING BEER AND HITTING ON WOMEN: THIS IS STRAIGHT-GUY MULTITASKING AT ITS FINEST.

Eventually, Millman's friends, Southie Bill and Derek, come out (or maybe a better word choice is "arrive") and join the crew. After I give an impromptu demonstration of how to shotgun a beer, we turn our attention to the tackle dummy, Gilman.

Gilman is a padded, armless torso with straps on his back that allow the "coach" to bolster him while testosterone-fueled steakheads practice their tackling technique. Derek takes the coach role first; he's wearing a nylon jacket, aviator glasses and a whistle lanyard around his neck for coachlike realism. After hitting Gilman/Derek several times, I take the straps and encourage Jonathan and William to get mean. Jonathan musters decent enthusiasm for hitting Gilman, but William treats Gilman as if he's said something contemptuous about fur coats or Paul Smith shirts. He puts his shoulder into the dummy and gets low, driving me back until I give up. Well done.

We try to get Millman to make a few tackles, but he's bored with Gilman. "I humped Gilman earlier," he explains. "I flipped him over. A Missy Elliott, if you know what I mean." Take that thang down, flip it and reverse it—right. None of our gay tailgaters show any inclination to hump Gilman, so the molesting of inanimate objects will hereby be deemed a straight attribute.

Then I toss the football around with Paul, who throws a better spiral than I do. But that's not really worth talking about.

NICE...EYES

All that activity makes us mighty hungry, so it's time to head downtown for some sustenance, Hooters style. Two of our three subjects have never been to Hooters, although Paul has been once before, possibly because he thought it was an owl-themed restaurant and might be really campy. Seeing Hooters for the first time, Jonathan and William have interesting observations. The first is that many of the tables in Hooters are inordinately tall. In fact, they're just about high enough that if you were a well-endowed woman, you could rest your charges there while, say, taking an order for 50 buffalo wings from a bunch of slobbering fools. Budweiser's "Real Men of Genius" commercials should devote 30 seconds to Mr. Hooters' table designer sometime.

The second observation is that Hooters is surprisingly family-oriented, with several tables occupied by parents and their li'l hooters. As Paul says, "I think it's all about Dad's choices."

The waitresses are friendly but become even more friendly when they find out that three of our party would use a putter instead of a wedge when hitting a golf ball from the rough. (Note to self: Bring gay guys to Hooters more often.) Murph and I coach the fellas at ogling while devouring wings and watching football on TV. Richard gets lots of attention from the waitresses because of his accent. (Another note to self: Cultivate a British accent.) To wrap up the day in fine straight fashion, none of us manages to get the digits from our waitress (the lovely Marissa) or any of the other girls.

I hope that our three volunteers have learned a little something over the course of the day about the wonders of straightdom. I've learned a few things myself—for instance, that gay guys constantly call their friends fags, too. But I'm glad it's over. My face is dry from being outside all day, and I'm dying to get away from the gays. They're fun to hang out with and all, but my Lancôme moisturizer costs $40 a bottle and I don't want to share.

From top: After taking this picture, Richard, the photographer, suggests that Paul's IHRA (International Hot Rod Association) hat should stand for Improper Homosexuals Rapidly Accelerating; Jonathan and William perform the gay tech inspection, confirming that the Infiniti has lighted vanity mirrors; the gay contingent enjoys the motorcycle races, as well as the motorcycle racers; Paul prepares to get in touch with his straight side with a 97 mph quarter-mile run in the M45.

THE QUEER GUY

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

When Ezra Dyer, THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's resident joker, proposed turning the tables on the hottest show on TV by giving me a straight-guy makeover, my initial reaction was, "What for? I already know how to scratch my privates and belch in public."

But then I thought about it. As a style-savvy gay man, I like to stay ahead of trends, and since gay is the new straight, it's only a matter of time before the pendulum swings back and it's cool to be a clueless hetero guy again.

True to stereotype, I can make a soufflé, artfully arrange knickknacks and cobble together a passable outfit from anyone's wardrobe, but my eyes tend to glaze over when the talk turns to sports, and if I'm staring at a woman's breasts, it's only because I'm wondering if she's had a boob job. A few pointers wouldn't hurt.

With that in mind, I recruited two gay friends, and we agreed to undergo a butching up at the hands of Ezra, an avowed heterosexual. At least that's what he says, and I have no reason to doubt him, even if he did wear rainbow flip-flops around the office last summer. (Plus, a guy who lives in Bay Village and asks you to go "drag racing" does make you wonder.) Ezra's friend Murph, by comparison, is practically Clint Eastwood, and Murph drives a Mercedes, gets $100 haircuts and has a framed photo of Audrey Hepburn in his apartment.

DRESSING 'N' DRAG

You know you're gay when you wonder what kind of cologne to wear drag racing. This is the thought that occurs to me as I get ready at 6 am to pick up my fellow homosexuals—Paul, the de facto husband-type-person of my interior-decorator friend Duncan, and William, who owns a chi-chi hair salon on Newbury Street.

After choosing what I consider an appropriately sporty outfit (striped sweater, jeans, black leather jacket, minimal jewelry), I drive into town to collect Paul, who's dressed essentially like the frat boy he once was, and William, who's wearing $200 Moschino blue jeans, a Paul Smith shirt with French cuffs and a vintage bear fur coat. (Needless to say, William will be the only person, male or female, wearing a fur coat at the New England Dragway.) He also, quite sensibly, has come equipped with Clarins Eye Contour Gel and a matte face cream called Never Let Them See You Shine, since, as he points out, "there's going to be a camera."

YOU KNOW YOU'RE GAY WHEN YOU WONDER WHAT KIND OF COLOGNE TO WEAR DRAG RACING.

We meet up with Murph and Ezra, who has borrowed what I take to be a muscle car in Infiniti clothing, and head north in two separate cars, stopping along the way at Dunkin' Donuts for breakfast. A brief comparison of the scenes in the two cars is telling: In ours, we're listening to a chill CD called Café St. Germain, and our conversation topics have included Rita Hayworth and the Aga Khan. In theirs, the stereo is blasting a compilation featuring Guns N' Roses, Def Leppard and Garth Brooks, while the conversation has mainly been about snow tires.

Clearly, they have their work cut out for them.

Although the three of us are sharp enough to know that drag racing has nothing to do with men dressed in women's clothing, William does say, "I see a couple of women who could pass for drag queens...but they wouldn't win any prizes."

What we haven't anticipated is the endless standing around. Before you can drive your car on the track, it has to get "teched," which involves lining up behind a hundred or so other cars and waiting for an official with a clipboard to check the engine, tires, transmission, seatbelts, etc.

While we wait, William makes the observation, "A gay tech would be more like: leather interior, CD player, lighted mirror on the visors..."

When a guy carrying engine parts and french fries passes by, someone asks, "Anyone hungry?"

"Yeah," says one of the straight guys. "Let's go get some street meat."

Ever helpful, William points out: "In my culture, that means something completely different."

Besides snacking on the kind of greasy, high-carb carnival food most of our gay brethren wouldn't be caught dead choking on (curly fries and hot dogs), we take the opportunity to do a complete wardrobe change at the souvenir stand. For $200, the three of us go from fab to drab in 60 seconds, buying T-shirts, baseball caps and sweatshirts emblazoned with racing logos in lurid colors. But for the first time that morning, we actually look like we fit in.

"I'll be back in a few minutes," says William. "I wanna go see what the motorcycle guys look like off their bikes."

Paul is the reluctant captain of Team Homo, having agreed to drive the car. "Why don't we just blast disco music and make our way leisurely to the finish line?" he jokes. But when it finally comes time to race, he covers a quarter of a mile in 14.26 seconds—faster than the recorded time for the car. In fact, any faster and, by law, he would have needed a helmet.

He's modest about his accomplishment, though, observing that "only a straight guy would wait four hours for a thrill that lasts 14 seconds."

Score one for the Gay Boys.

TAILGATING FOR DUMMIES

Ezra's friend Millman greets us at Boston College with a Coors Light in one hand and a tackle dummy in the other. "Hit it! Hit it!" he screams, and we all dutifully crash into him, although I go for the comic effect of making out with it. (As it turns out, the tackle dummy is a better kisser than some of the men I've dated.)

Like all good tailgate parties, no one pays much attention to the game, except to say, "What happened?" when the crowd erupts in a roar. This allows me to hide my complete and total ignorance of football and concentrate, instead, on drinking beer, which is something I do at a varsity level. However, we all decline Ezra's offer to do a beer bong, politely begging off as he wipes the foam out of his nostrils.

William asks to use the bathroom and Millman directs him to a row of shrubs, saying, "The neighbors won't mind."

Meanwhile, Ezra picks up a football and tosses it to Paul, who throws back a perfect spiral.

"Ouch!" says Ezra, catching it.

By the time we leave, I'm the only guy who has had a conversation with the only girl there.

Score another for the Gay Boys.

BY THE TIME WE LEAVE, I'M THE ONLY GUY WHO HAS HAD A CONVERSATION WITH THE ONLY GIRL THERE. SCORE ANOTHER FOR THE GAY BOYS.

GUESS THE GAY MAN

Next stop, Hooters. After getting us a table in the middle of the restaurant, Paul goes to the men's room. Upon his return, he reports that while he did read the sports pages posted above the urinal, he studiously tried to ignore the menu hanging next to it.

Our nubile and extremely friendly waitress comes over to take our order. In keeping with the day's testosterone theme, it's beers all around and a platter of 50 extra-spicy buffalo wings. When Ezra tells the waitress why we're there and asks her to pick out who's gay, she gets it all wrong, pointing at our photographer and saying, "He's not?"

"No," I explain. "He's just British."

While Murph tries to remove the stick-on paper bracelet from New England Dragway from Ezra's arm, Ezra screams, "It's stuck to the hair!"

William turns to me and says, "Imagine how he'd fare with chest waxing."

We hold our own with the straight guys in guzzling beer and inhaling iridescent-orange chicken parts, although we're noticeably neater about it.

When the waitress returns with the check, she singles out William to chat with.

"First time at Hooters?" she asks.

"Yeah," he answers.

"How do you like it?" she asks.

"I thought the guys would be hotter."

She laughs uproariously, gives William a flirtatious little hug and agrees to pose for a photo in which William, Paul and I are brazenly staring at her chest.

As he pays the bill, I overhear Ezra trying to convince our waitress to give him her phone number, because, he says, in actual point of fact, he's gay, too.

"No, really! I mean it!" he says lamely, watching her walk away.

Score another for the Gay Boys.

At the end of the day, we've all learned a lot about how to be a straight guy, which Paul and William sum up:

"Basically, it's like being a lesbian," says Paul.

"Only you have to dress like it's 1985," adds William.

It's an important lesson, I think, and one that shouldn't be lost on members of the far-right or groups like the Gay Recovery Movement, who believe that an individual's sexual orientation is something they choose. After all, who in their right mind would choose to dress badly, behave like a buffoon and be uncomfortable talking to women? iB

From top: Jonathan and Paul can't restrain their pinkies, even while chugging Coors Light; while the straights hit the tackle dummy, Jonathan hits on him; Ezra prepares to catch a blistering spiral from Paul, the gay Brett Favre; Jonathan talks to a woman; Jonathan quickly picks up the ways of the hetero at Hooters.

GIVING OUTSIDE THE BOX

JUMP-START YOUR HOLIDAY SHOPPING WITH THESE CREATIVE IDEAS THAT DON'T REQUIRE YOU TO BATTLE HORDES OF SHOPPERS OR EVEN FUSS WITH WRAPPING PAPER AND BOWS

BY KRISTEN PAULSON

Treat your busiest friend to a home cooked meal by hiring Catherine Thompson for kitchen duty

You're eating lunch at your desk (again), contemplating what to give the people on your holiday list. Remember how you felt when you unwrapped that reindeer sweater one year? ("Gee, um, thanks....") What if, instead, you came up with a truly creative present that broadened the recipient's horizons—literally or figuratively? And what if buying that gift didn't require you to battle for parking or stand in line at a store? To help you make those "what ifs" a reality, we set out to find gifts that are both out-of-the-ordinary and easy to purchase. Just point, click or pick up the phone, and your loved one can have an experience like snowboarding, exploring an exotic locale or learning how to give a massage. Our ideas will help you think outside the gift box—without actually requiring that you wrap one.

READY, SET, GO

Housed in a former seminary in the Berkshires, the Kripalu Center for Yoga & Health has a beautiful view of the mountains, and its flexible Holiday Retreat and Renewal weekends can bring peace and serenity to someone you care about. Guests can practice yoga, hike, meditate, choose from a host of spa services, dance to live drumming and savor vegetarian meals (breakfast in the main dining hall is silent, to encourage a meditative environment). Activities are geared for all fitness levels. The one downside may be that no caffeine is served, but if your giftee must have some, he or she can take a short drive to downtown Lenox, Mass., for a fix. The center's nightly rate is $120-$273 depending on room type; meals and all program activities are included. 800-741-7353. www.kripalu.org.

The eagle has landed. On your friend's arm. At the 1,300-acre Equinox Resort in Manchester Village, Vt., city folk can learn "country pursuits" such as archery, off-road driving and falconry. Falconers keep 13 Harris hawks and two eagles at the British School of Falconry located on the premises. Guests can take a "hawk walk" (a stroll with a hawk flying nearby), go hunting with the birds for pheasant and quail (Brittany spaniels and English setters flush out the prey), or simply hold a bird (protective equipment is provided). More traditional recreation options include ice skating, cross-country skiing or early-morning snowshoeing. Guests can also receive a beauty treatment, like a facial, at the Equinox's Avanyu Spa. An introductory lesson in falconry costs $85; facials at the spa range from $145–$250. 888-367-7625. www.equinox.rockresorts.com.

For those who love to travel, the skies just got friendlier. You can purchase Delta gift certificates, available in $350 increments, for a friend, a spouse or someone cherished whom you want to send far, far away. Recipients can apply the certificate toward any Delta flight or vacation package or an annual Crown Room Club membership that provides preflight amenities. The certificate is valid for one year after the issue date, which should give you enough lead time to convince your loved one to bring along a travel companion. $350. 800-221-1212.

BODY & MIND

We finally figured out how to get boyfriends to reciprocate massages: Hire a professional to supervise. During a Giuliano Day Spa Massage Partners treatment, a massage technician teaches pairs to massage each other in two (back-to-back) 50-minute sessions. Watchful experts give hands-on instruction in draping the body, Swedish technique, foot massage and gauging how much pressure is appropriate. Many couples also purchase essential oils at the spa for home practice. The service isn't just for couples, though—mothers and daughters and pairs of sisters have also been flocking to the Newbury Street spa's massage school. $160 for two back-to-back sessions. 617-262-2220. www.giulianodayspa.com.

Couples can learn the art of massage at Giuliano Day Spa.

Anybody on your list can benefit from Kate Lubin's life coaching. Lubin, founder of a company called Upshot, doesn't simply cheer her clients on or tell them to get in touch with their feelings. The Cambridge-based consultant is more of a drill sergeant for life goals—without the pushups—helping people formulate a game plan for getting what they want. Her clients, the majority of them male, learn to take action and thrive, whether that means improving a current relationship or angling for a promotion at work. Upshot holiday packages, $225-$445 for two to four 30-60 minute sessions per month. Complimentary introductory session. 617-621-8037. www.raiseyourstandards.com.

Does someone you know need the Reformer? The machine, one of several at Boston Pilates, may sound like a form of strict religious intervention, but the fitness buff in your life will thank you. Thanks to Pilates' regimen of stretching and building long, lean muscles, one female client at the fully equipped studio lost two inches from her waist and hips and actually gained a quarter inch in height. That's because Pilates works to elongate the spine, which can get compressed over time without enough stretching, according to instructor BrieAnn Voeller. This gift gives new meaning to personal growth. $15 and up per person for groups of five; $65-$85 per hour for individuals. 617-524-0118.

FEATHERING THE NEST

Anatoly Tsirelson of A.R.T. Consulting in Brookline is a trained practitioner of Black Hat Sect feng shui. Though the name might seem more fitting for an outlaw gang in a Western movie, Black Hat Sect feng shui is a popular form of the Chinese art that's said to promote positive energy through proper arrangement of the home and work environment. Two of A.R.T.'s consultants go through your friend's living space, asking questions about his or her lifestyle and observing the placement of furniture and objects. After the evaluation, they make recommendations about colors, textures, fabrics, artwork, plants, lighting and accessories that will encourage a harmoniously balanced living space. $450 for a three-hour consultation. 617-566-5995. www.fengshuiart.net.

Interior design is a more concrete reconfiguration of space. At the South End firm IOI Inc., a consultant works one-on-one with clients, asking them to collect images that they like (or don't like, since people are generally better at that) with the aim of understanding and interpreting their wishes and tastes. The consultant uses the information to help the client choose furniture as well as fabrics and colors for interiors. Lately, according to the company's principal Io Oakes, the trend has been toward open, one-room spaces and professionally equipped kitchens. $115 per hour with Io Oakes; less for other designers. 617-338-0436.

Some people find cleaning therapeutic. Then there are the rest of us who seem to barely have time to control the clutter. Give the gift of time to someone on your list who isn't so enamored of cleaning. The staff at MaidPro will expertly tidy the recipient's home, including cleaning cabinets and vacuuming upholstery. Charges vary based on number of bedrooms and floors; a 2.5-hour session costs $99. 877-624-3776. www.maidpro.com.

CONSPICUOUS CONSUMPTION

Tell your friend to imagine the warm weather, soaring gulls and the roar of the ocean when you send him or her a Legal Sea Foods Maine Event lobster dinner. One meal—shipped overnight via Federal Express—includes a fresh, live lobster, nine littleneck steamer clams, one pint of Legal's award-winning New England clam chowder with oyster crackers, a bib, a claw cracker and a moist towelette for each person. Cooking instructions are included. $119.95 (for two), $199.95 (for four). 800-328-3474. www.legalseafoods.com.

Do you have a friend who's mastered the art of boiling water? Whatever the person's skill level in the kitchen, there's an appropriate cooking class at the Cambridge Center for Adult Education. Anyone Can Cook is a crash course in the basics. The class usually has a wait list—a sure sign that many of us out there are culinarily challenged. Sweet tooths may go for Crafting with Chocolate or Cake Decorating, while the Friday night cooking series has lots of savory choices from Japanese Cooking to Spanish Paella to Roasted Duck. Good thing bathing-suit season's a long way off. $41-$121. 617-547-6789. www.ccae.org.

For the busy professional who has no time to cook, give the gift of Somerville chef Catherine Thompson's home-style meals. Every Monday, Thompson prepares a weekly menu from scratch and delivers the meals by 6 pm. Delivery is available to Cambridge, Somerville, Arlington and five other towns north of Boston. Thompson balances her offerings, providing healthy entrées like fish and one or two indulgences, such as cream sauce. The food isn't fussy—think stuffed chicken breast, not rabbit medallions—but recent menus have included salmon, asparagus and leek crepes. The price per meal is $14. For carb counters, Thompson offers low-carbohydrate meal options (for Tuesday or Friday delivery). 617-538-2386. www.catherinescuisine.com.

For the gastronome on your list, you can purchase a gift certificate from one of two outlets. The Diner's Choice gift card from Certificates, Etc. can be redeemed at 130 New England restaurants, from Davio's in Cambridge to Vito's in West Bridgewater plus options in Rhode Island, west of Boston, and on Cape Cod. It's available in denominations of $25, $50, $75 and $100 and can be redeemed for the full value for one meal, or on multiple occasions at different restaurants. Dinegift offers a choice of 60 restaurants including Boston's Elephant Walk and Icarus, plus others on the North and South shores, Cape Cod and west of the city. Available denominations are $15, $25, $50 and $100. Both gift cards offer some of the same choices (Bob the Chef's, Ambrosia). You may want to check each site's restaurant list to make the best choice for your favorite gourmand. www.certificatesetc.com, 508-285-8793. www.dinegift.com, 877-705-4438.

MaidPro will serve as Felix to the Oscar on your list.

SCHOOL'S IN

"So much of snowboarding is jumps and half-pipes—it's more chick related," says Wachusett Mountain Ski & Snowboard School director Bruce McDonald. Uh, whatever. Chicks and guys can learn the two-edged sport that's hard to start but fairly easy to pick up with a bit of instruction. Group lessons last 1.5 hours, and you need your own equipment (rentals are available). See you in the half-pipe. The Princeton, Mass., ski area is an hour-and-a-half drive from Boston. Cost ranges from $28-$250, depending on the number of lessons and whether you choose private or group instruction. 978-464-2300. www.wachusett.com.

During one of the coldest months of the year, it may be difficult to imagine learning striptease, but Take It Off!, taught by proprietrix Kim Airs, is Grand Opening! Sexuality Boutique's most popular class for women (and women only—sorry, guys). Participants learn to flaunt their bodies and turn on their partners by saucily removing their clothes. Airs creates a warm and supportive classroom environment in the Brookline shop; but you can reassure your giftee that participation isn't required in class. That comes later, when she busts out her skills in the privacy of her own home. $34. Feb. 25, 7:30-9:30 pm. 617-731-2626. www. grandopening.com.

"In our Skip Barber Three Day Racing School, we gradually 'unlimit' your speed," reads the Skip Barber Web site. "By the last day, the top speed on the straightaways is well over 100 mph." Auto enthusiasts on your list will need no further convincing. They'll drive single-seat, open-cockpit, open-wheel Formula Dodges in Intro to Racing classes ($595-$695) or R/T 2000 Formula Dodges in the Advanced Two-Day Racing School ($1,925-$2,295). The company offers classes year round at locations nationwide; they're held in Lime Rock, Conn. (2.5 hours from Boston) from April through November. A bonus: Recipients can brag they went to the same school as Mario Andretti's 16-year-old grandson, Marco. 800-221-1131. www. skipbarber.com. iB

HANGOVER HELPER

BY ANDREW GRAHAM

THE HOLIDAYS ARE UPON US. WHAT WILL YOU DO WHEN YOU WAKE UP ON THE WRONG SIDE OF THE BOTTLE?

Ever have Night Train? It smells like paint thinner mixed with Kool-Aid, and feels just as smooth going down. The last time I had it was at my friend Sean's place. The aftereffects were nightmarish, mainly due to the fact that once I polished off the Night Train, all those little bottles of candy-flavored Jack Daniel's sorority-girl whiskey on the coffee table started to look really good. I don't think I have to tell you what happened next. At least I hope I don't, because I can't remember. All I can remember about that night is the next morning, and the pain.

I experienced another grand mal hangover a couple of years ago, and gin was to blame for that one. You know how after a few gin and tonics, they just get easier and easier to make and drink? Until eventually you're just skipping the tonic part altogether? Yeah, that's the sweet part. The slightly more bitter part was waking up the next day at 12:45 and miserably scampering to meet my girlfriend. When I got there a half-hour late, she said I literally looked green. Then I turned and sprinted to a nearby restroom and, bending only slightly at the waist, orally emitted a powerful burst of used gin and some faint traces of tonic.

Good times, good times. But the question we're addressing today is how to avoid experiences like those during the holiday season. The obvious answer is total abstinence—no drinks, no problems! But who among us is willing to take that drastic step onto the wagon? As long as there are football games, company holiday parties and opening bands, there will be drinks and drunks. So is there a way to avoid the consequences? Dr. Beers of Brigham and Women's Hospital and Dr. Sober of Mass. General both declined to participate in this story, so instead we turned to trusted sources like gut instinct and urban legend. Shall we?

Bloody Mary morning: Good for a lightweight hangover—the vodka helps numb your pain while the Tabasco snaps your other senses back to consciousness. Best used in combination with greasy food, if possible. Top drinking scientists have discovered there's a direct correlation between the amount of grease in a breakfast of homefries, bacon and a western omelette, and the speed at which a hangover slides out of your system. There's no documentary evidence of this phenomenon, but that's just because no one's gone through the scientists' pockets to find the crumpled-up cocktail napkins they took their notes on.

The breakfast cure, part two: If you're too hung over to cook or even leave the house, I've found V8 or Gatorade to work OK, but not miraculously. I've also heard friends recommend Froot Loops with beer, but if you think I'm even going near a bowl of that, hungover or stone sober, you're drunker than I am. But I'm skeptical of morning-after cures. As a rule, I've found that cleanup doesn't cut it; you have to lay the groundwork in advance.

Hair of the dog: I remember waking up foggy and wasted in a strange Indiana house two years ago to the sight of my friend Cam filling a cup from the keg. I looked at him with tears in my eyes. "Please be gentle with me, Cam, I'm on my beeriod," I said. "No breakfast till you finish this," he replied, handing me the cup. It was a pretty good weekend. I kept drinking the rest of that day and the next, and eventually felt healthy again about a week later. So it must have worked. What did we have for breakfast? Search me.

Top shelf beats rail: If you're healthily wealthy, you stand a better chance of avoiding a hangover. Pricier liquors are generally more meticulously distilled than the rotgut the rest of us proles drink. Also, they contain fewer of the congeners (that's a fancy drinking-scientist term meaning "poison") that contribute to the morning-after monster. Similarly, lighter colored liquors (say, vodka) have fewer congeners than darker ones (like whiskey). So remember: Clear is cool, dark is dangerous.

Try being a man instead of a woman: Researchers at the University of Missouri recently discovered that women's hangovers are statistically more harsh than men's. So if you're a girl, you might try some testosterone injections. Now that'll put hair on your chest!

Mystery pills: Are you a Russian spy? If so, you'll be familiar with RU-21. No, it's not a fake-ID pill (pause, wait for laugh). It's a drug that was developed to allow KGB agents to drink without getting drunk. So while the target got soused, Agent X could match him drink for drink and still be lucid enough to photograph the secret files and disarm the bomb under the hood of his spymobile before driving off (safely!) into the dark Soviet night. Anyway, that was the theory. In practice, it turned out that the agents and their targets both got soused at the same rate, but, the KGB boys felt a whole lot better the next morning. What's the Russian word for "eureka"? And then there's Sob'r-K, which comes to you from the wonderful world of the Internet. The trick with Sob'r-K is that you take two before you start drinking, two while you're drinking and then two when you're done. I guess the premise is, you'll be totally hung up on remembering to take your pills, and you won't want to get too drunk and forget. Anyway, I wish you the best of luck with Internet pharmaceuticals; me, I'm choosing life.

Good old H_2O: This one is boring, but possibly the most effective. Not to get all scientechnical on you, but a huge contributor to every hangover is dehydration. The simplest way of using water to avoid the alcoholocaust is to drink a large glass before retiring for the evening (or a couple of glasses if you've really been swingin'). A more dedicated method involves drinking a glass of water for every alcoholic drink you consume. It's sort of a double-edged sword, though; drinking all that water slows your buzz down, so you have to drink more. But then, well, you're drinking more. So eventually, with patience, determination, and a little bit of old-fashioned elbow grease, you'll be as drunk as you wanna be. (Note: Please do not try to drink elbow grease.)

I hope this has been an informative and entertaining read. I did it all for you, you know. You're my best friend, really. You know that? I really, really love you. Hey, pal, what are you looking at? You got something to say? Do you want a piece of this? Huh? Do you? IB

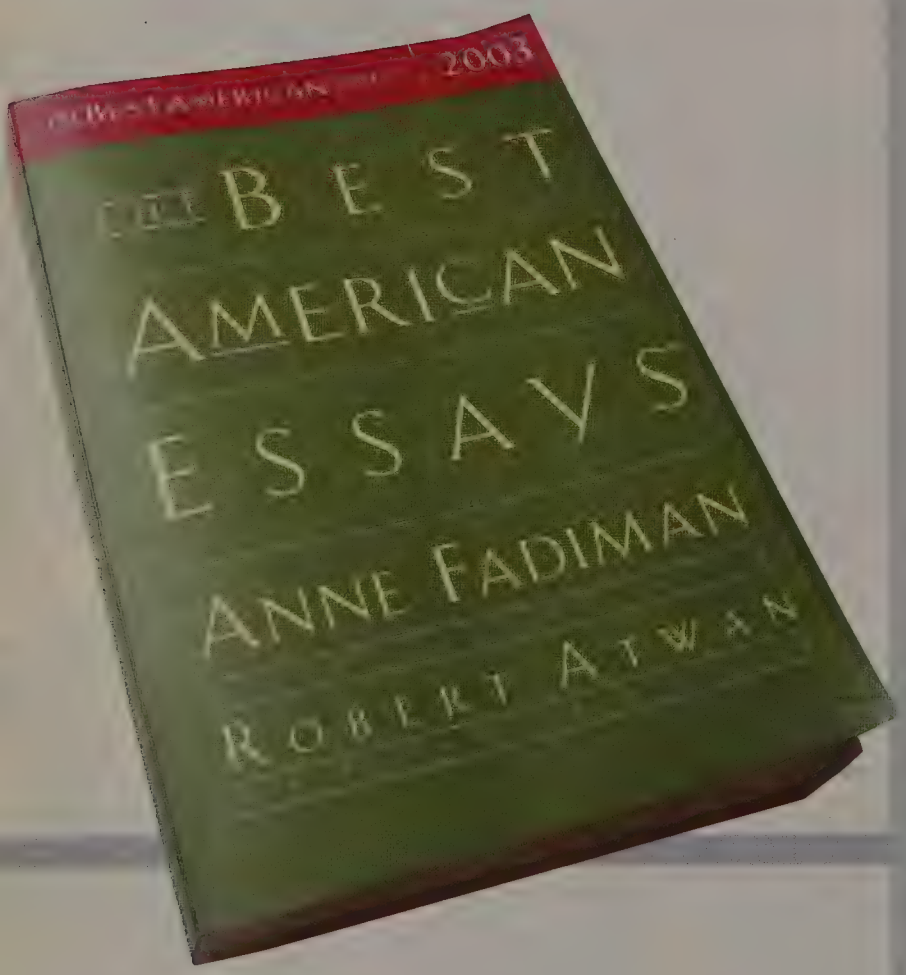
MOPSY

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



ANSWERS TO THE ESSAY QUESTION

The Best American Essays*, edited by Anne Fadiman—a western Mass. resident who lectures at Smith College—delivers a meaty handful of thought in many styles, from The New Yorker, Harper's and elsewhere.

The essay form is a wonderfully rich and varied genre. Remember your college ones, so bursting with feeling and electrified significance? Stylistic liberties make the essay a repository of exposition and argument that's also subjectively tinged, holidaying in the first-person realm of quasi-fiction at times. All these flavors abound in the 2003 edition of The Best American Essays. Critic Susan Sontag discusses, with furious passion, the perverse power of war photography to make the horrific banal, while draining away the "narratives" these images supplant. The effects of a mother's death—subtly evolving and weird—are explored by Cheryl Strayed, who, though married, reacted to her loss by sleeping with lots of men. Donald Antrim writes about how he responded to the same event in his life by torturously shopping for an expensive bed, full of zig-zagging associations. Dr. Atul Gawande takes readers through the respect and terror that a surgeon feels as he cuts human flesh for the first time. Adam Gopnik writes of his daughter Olivia's imaginary friend named Charlie Ravioli, who, in ironic replication of grown-ups, is chronically too busy to talk. These substantial literary bites satisfy.

FRISKY WHISKS, AND LOTS MORE!

Sur la Table has just landed in New England, at the Chestnut Hill Mall. The store offers a bevy of cooking-related items for the amateur or professional. Call 617-244-0213, or go to www.surlatable.com.

This spacious store, crammed with merchandise, is divided into like-minded sections. In one, you'll find a dizzying array of scrapers and peelers, including a long-as-your-arm grater, intricate widgets for florifying radishes or peeling asparagus, and specialized little items to score the shiny, withholding skin of chestnuts. Whisks as big as baseball bats await giant bowls of yolks. "The world has decided créme brûlée is its dessert," says SLT's Jacob. So there are ramekins, pertinent cookbooks and a caramelizer. Elaborate cutlery here includes a subtly beautiful Japanese santoku knife, part cleaver, part chef's knife, with a hand-friendly wooden handle; the blade sports subtle, aesthetic squiggles. Sur la Table's window is filled with big and bigger sunny copper cookware pieces; one professional pan has a long, imposing iron handle. Rock-solid, colorful FrancisFrancis! espresso machines are an apotheosis of chic Italian design (the red one is almost a sculpture). With elegant minimalism of gesture, your dark, glamorous brew emerges. KitchenAid mixers come in frothy pale pink and green. And Moroccan tagines—decorated earthenware towers—invite exotic cooking and sexy presentation.

A FRIEND IN NEED MIGHT BE A DOG

Phinney's Friends needs volunteers to help people with AIDS take care of their animals—walking them, feeding them, taking them to the vet, etc. For information on training, opportunities and requirements, call 617-541-5064.

Imagine the daily complications brought about by AIDS; think of the essential treasures and comforts a patient still hopes to preserve. For many, that would be an animal, radiating cozy acceptance. But weakness and unpredictable hospitalizations add uncertainty about walking, feeding and caring for an animal. Phinney's Friends (named after an animal-loving MSPCA policeman) helps AIDS patients keep their pets around by providing volunteers who help walk dogs, take cats to the vet, clean bird cages, deliver pet food and sometimes even foster pets temporarily. Some people, intimidated by doctors' dreaded orders to "get rid of that dog," need help getting preventive care for a pet's fleas or other conditions that immuno-compromised people need to be vigilant about. Deep and touching friendships sometimes develop within this patient-animal-volunteer triangle, especially when families have become estranged. Dogless volunteers get a huge benefit of companionship too.

REVIEW

ZON'S HAS ZIP

This chic boîte in Jamaica Plain offers comfort food with a twist

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

The concept of comfort food makes me uncomfortable. The phrase suggests straightforward, unfussy, home-cooked food. Admittedly, the nourishment created by a loved one's labors in the kitchen is often far superior to standard restaurant fare, but I have never felt moved to travel across town, try to find a parking space, and pay restaurant prices to eat something I could get at home. My dad was an excellent cook, but he took us out to restaurants to broaden our horizons, to deepen our appreciation for the arts of the table and to enjoy things we could not get at home because they were too laborious or time-consuming to prepare or could not garner a consensus in family menu construction.

Despite Zon's billing as a comfort food emporium, it is far more than that. It's a chic, almost trendy boîte on Perkins Street in Jamaica Plain. A high, black, sculptured metal ceiling continues part way down one wall, where it gives way to a deep shade of red. Black wrought-iron sconces with red candles continue the color motif, as do handsome black-and-white rectangular lampshades with silhouetted arches. Track lighting illuminates plate shelves lined with tchotchkes, and votive candles bathe the room with their flickering glow. Heavy absorbent cotton napkins and tall-stemmed, ample wine glasses add to the ambience.

Our waitress asked whether we would like bread, which is not brought as a matter or course—apparently the Atkins diet has arrived in JP. Our affirmative response produced chewy-crusted slightly sourdough from Iggy's, served with soft butter. The menu's seven appetizers (eight counting the occasional special), five sandwiches and 10 main courses included comfort food staples like macaroni and cheese and meatloaf, as well as more epicurean options. From the appetizers, we chose spinach salad ($7), barbecued pork flatbread ($10) and grilled clams ($10), a cross-section of offerings that, while not un-"comfortable," were a far cry from the staples in most home kitchens. The bowl of silky leaves of stemless baby spinach, crispy fried shallots, tangy goat cheese and well-balanced vinaigrette provided perfumes and flavors of the Mediterranean, redolent of fruity, aromatic olive oil.

The flatbread was an oval pizza layered with tender, smoky braised pork; sweet and spicy barbecue sauce; heavily garlicked swiss chard; creamy, mild Fontina cheese; and sweet caramelized onions. The clams, almost a dozen plump, tender littlenecks steamed open in their shells, were bathed in Tabasco-parsley butter, garlic and a lemony broth from which a mammoth, coarse-textured crostini of toasted sourdough bread protruded.

From the main-course selections, despite my skepticism about comfort food, I could not overlook the meatloaf ($15). While its presentation—mounted atop a mound of mashed potatoes pureed with sour cream and chives—followed the tedious, formulaic layering practice that is de rigueur in so many restaurants, the meatloaf's hearty, beefy goodness carried the day. A rich, shallot-infused gravy rendered from the cooking juices enhanced both the meat and the potatoes, while somehow failing to impair the first-rate texture and freshness of the accompanying slender French green string beans, firm to the bite and vivid in flavor.

Zon's meatloaf far outshined one night's "daily comfort," a braised shank of lamb ($22). First, I was surprised at its tariff, which turned out to be the highest-priced offering that night, a fact neither disclosed on the menu nor mentioned by the server—the only lapse in otherwise outstanding service. (When a special is not within the price range of other menu offerings, I think it's incumbent on the server to mention its price.) Moreover, while the lamb was fall-off-the-bone tender, it had a somewhat bland flavor, lacking the enrichment that a good braising liquid, based on flavor-exchanging vegetables and herbs, usually imparts. The pleasantly bitter swiss chard and large-grained Israeli couscous that accompanied the lamb helped rescue the dish.

The 10-ounce sirloin steak ($21) arrived rare as ordered, but I was surprised to see that it was presliced in the kitchen and presented in somewhat busy and muddled fashion among its garnishes. Fortunately, the garnishes were first rate, including a luscious creamed spinach laced with garlic and a toothsome preparation that the menu called pommes anna, slices of intriguingly flavored potatoes layered in the fashion of potatoes Lyonnaise. The star of Zon's main-course lineup was the cod ($19). This double-thick filet of flaky, perfectly textured fish transported us from JP to Gloucester. Pristine in its freshness, the cod was enhanced by the accompanying sweet potato–acorn squash hash and caramelized balsamic onions studded with nuggets of bacon. The ensemble, simple yet elegant, provided reason by itself to come to this eatery.

Along with its well-conceived and well prepared food, Zon's offers a reasonable selection of wines. These ranged from a first rate Prosecco ($23), a slightly off dry Italian sparkler that made a superb aperitif to a full-bodied, aromatic 2001 Sangiovese from the house of Coltibuono. This well-structured red, with good acid balance and fine tannins, remarkably mellowed for its youth, proved a satisfying accompaniment to the food.

Roasted salmon with mustard lentils du Puy, creamed spinach and leeks

Zon's pleasures continued through dessert. Selections (each $7) included a warm pear brioche bread pudding, moist with cinnamon custard and pears that had been poached in Port, with an intoxicating rum crème fraîche sauce. Warm apple crumb pie brought a rich pecan crumb topping and a luxurious scoop of slightly sweetened whipped cream. Finally, the chocolate cake, a warm, semisweet flourless cake, boasted intense chocolate flavor and a texture far more moist than the usual specimen of this genre, which has become a standard on Boston dessert cards. The pleasantly tart citrus curd that accompanied it also elevated it among its peers.

So tastefully conceived and professionally prepared were the dishes at Zon's that they totally disabused me of the idea that this is a place to come for comfort food. When my wife suggested that I did the restaurant a disservice by failing to order its signature macaroni and cheese, I replied that anyone who can take comfort in macaroni and cheese was not brought up in a staunchly Catholic home in the 1950s. The next thing you know there'll be a move to bring back mac and cheese's Friday night sibling—fish sticks. Holy quenelle! IB

WINE

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

Ask almost any wine lover of a certain age and you're likely to find that a bottle of red Burgundy first fired the flames of his or her passion. Not that too many people are discovering wine through Burgundy today. Overall quality may be better than ever, but outside of a few committed restaurants and specialty stores, the wines have pulled a disappearing act. Why? Too expensive, too obscure, too inconsistent from vintage to vintage and producer to producer, just too much of a bother.

What makes Burgundy so alluring is the fact that so many thousands of different wines are produced in such small lots, and they all taste subtly different. Unfortunately, those characteristics are also what makes Burgundy so irrelevant to the demands of today's American market. The formula that works is slick labeling, varietal designation, strong branding, dark colors, new oak aromas, potent alcohol and flavor impact—wines that make an unmistakable impression and are therefore easy to buy and sell. One of the reasons we're not drinking Burgundy is that it's the antithesis of easy. It's a wild card, and most of the people who control which products appear in stores and restaurants tend to avoid it.

But make no mistake, Burgundy's worth knowing. If you explore its mysteries, no wine is potentially better or more satisfying. In a world of increasing sameness, the wines are always unique. And in a region whose weather has been maddeningly inconsistent, Burgundy is on something of a roll. Call it climate change, but much like other northern European wine districts, such as Alsace, the Loire and Germany, Burgundy's most recent vintages have yielded riper and more delicious fruit than any other comparable stretch in recorded history. By all indications 2002 will be something special: A droughtlike summer and a dry, sunny autumn have everyone talking about potentially the most perfect tasting grapes since 1990. And the reports are that the wines will be delicious at every level of the quality hierarchy, from village wines through Premier and Grand Crus.

The best producers' 2002 red Burgundies won't even be shipped until late in 2004, but there are currently plenty of fine vintages on hand. Despite uneven weather, 2001 was quite good for northern Burgundy's Côte de Nuits, especially the villages of Gevrey-Chambertin and Vosne Romanee; it strikes me as a year for which paying up for quality and buying wines at the upper end of the hierarchy is wise. The year 2000 produced elegant wines, early-maturing and charming, with the slightly less pricey southern Côte de Beaune wines quite impressive. The widely available 1999 yielded outstanding quality across the board but in a more massive, uncharacteristically full-bodied style. These are good cellar candidates. We have to go back to 1998 for a vintage that presented problems, but even here the top producers made very fleshy, fruity reds, with the Côte de Nuits standing out again. To my taste, the quality producers separated themselves from the pack and made delicious, early-maturing (as in now, today) reds in 1997, an unusually warm variable vintage. And 1996 produced classic Burgundy with good ripeness, big tannins and strong overall consistency from village to village.

But the reputation of the producer and the characteristics of the place where the grapes originate are even more important than vintage in selecting Burgundy. The vaunted French notion of terroir reflects the fact that a small plot of land, angled to the sun on a slope at a particular pitch, with sand, clay and limestone in the subsoil, makes very different tasting grapes than a neighboring plot oriented slightly differently with another geological formation. The finest Burgundies emphasize aromas and flavors arising from the vineyard.

If you want to explore Burgundy wines, do it with friends. The wines lend themselves to tasting and discussion. A start would be to line up four wines of diverse geographic origins, perhaps made by the same producer in one vintage to eliminate some of the variables. Spend some time comparing the aromas, which in young Burgundy often reveal more than is immediately apparent upon swallowing. You might try a more generic wine, (such as a Côte de Beaune-Villages) with a village wine from the south (Volnay is among the most delicate and perfumed), one from the north (Gevrey-Chambertin tends to be vigorous and sturdy by contrast) and a Premier Cru–designated wine, which should reveal more aromatic layering and concentration (Vosne Romanee and Chambolle-Musigny both have several). For the advanced session, throw in a Grand Cru at the luxury end of the scale (Corton is a good relative value) and a Premier Cru from the Côte de Beaune (the village of Beaune boasts several which are usually very accessible, and there are also many top sites in Pommard). ■

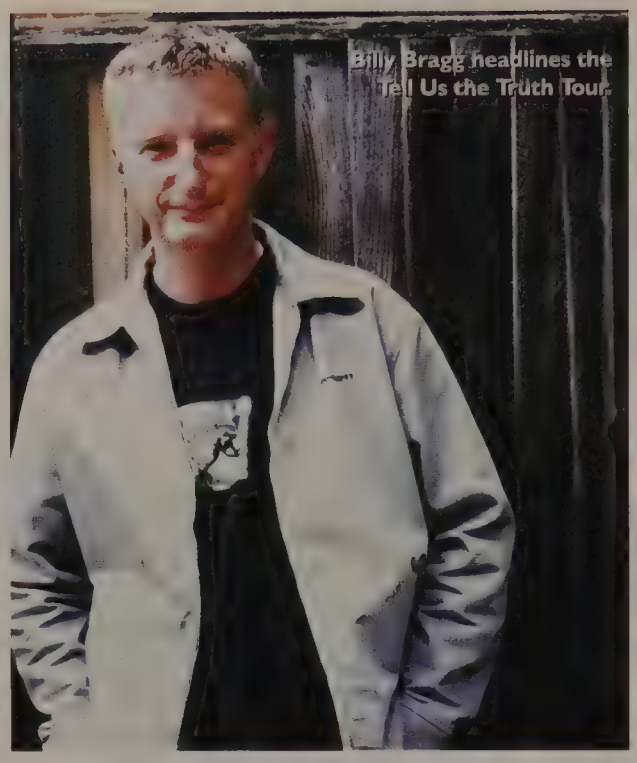
Performing Arts: It's up in the Air

The Flying Karamazov Brothers don't actually fly during their show—but objects do. During a segment called "The Gamble," the Flying K's ask audience members to hand over whatever objects they think will prove unjugglable—past audiences have brought livers, computers, ice cream, and even a nine-pound dead octopus. Betting a standing ovation against a pie in the face that it can be done, the juggling "Champ" wows audiences with his agility and skill. A caveat: He won't juggle "any live animals or anything that might stop the Champ from being a live animal." These former street performers put on quite a show, including a taiko drumming session on cardboard boxes and a Polish Appalachian clog dance. Ringling Bros. beware! Symphony Hall, 301 Mass. Ave., Boston (888-266-1200). 3 pm. $37-$57.

SUN./NOV. 23

Music: Protest Songs



Billy Bragg headlines the Tell Us the Truth Tour.

Protest music is alive and well. A group of politically minded musicians have joined together to speak/sing their minds on the Tell Us the Truth Tour, a sort of group cri de coeur to raise awareness of the relationship between "bad policies and bad journalism" and encourage activism. With support from unions and environmental, religious and media reform groups, musician Billy Bragg assembled the tour and enlisted Audioslave guitarist Tom Morello (a.k.a. the Nightwatchman), gospel-soul singer Lester Chambers and comedian Janeane Garafalo. (Country great Steve Earle is on hand for the Boston show.) The 12-city cross-country tour, apart from being a forum for the artists to voice their political frustrations, raises funds to support future artist/activist partnerships. If you can't make the concert, you can still read the online tour diary at www.tellusthetruth.org. Berklee Performance Center, 136 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-931-2000). 7:30 pm. $30–$35.50.

CityScope: Dog on It

We all know a pet freak—someone who regales his or her officemates with stories of little Ned's latest hiding spot in the linen closet or Coco's amazing leap off a dock into the water. A new book called Throw Me a Bone: 50 Healthy, Canine Taste-Tested Recipes for Meals, Snacks, and Treats might make the perfect holiday gift for dog owners who like to spoil their precious pup. Authors Susan Orlean (of The Orchid Thief fame) and Sally Sampson conferred with the "canine James Beard," a Welsh springer spaniel named Cooper Gillespie, to come up with recipes for such delicacies as "pawcakes" and "grrrnola." The resulting creations are so delicious, dog owners may be tempted to nibble themselves. Orlean and Sampson (along with Cooper) sign and present recipes from their book at the Hotel Marlowe's Holiday Book Drive to benefit Cambridge's East End House. 25 Edwin H. Land Blvd., Cambridge (617-395-2523). 4 pm. Free.

Qian Yi stars in Snow in June

SAT./NOV. 29-SUN./DEC. 28

Performing Arts: Snow in June...in December?

The challenges posed to the American Repertory Theatre's set and prop shops for Snow in June sound like something out of the Learning Channel's Junkyard Wars. Make a handful of props—including a lawnmower, brooms, an umbrella and a bicycle—appear transparent. Then figure out how to stage a nightly snowstorm using three different types of shredded plastic—each falling and accumulating differently—to pile 500 pounds of artificial snow across the stage. The designers worked long and hard to create an ethereal fantasy world for this 13th-century Yuan drama adapted and directed by Chinese director Chen Shi-Zheng from a text by Charles L. Mee. It's about a young girl who returns to earth to seek revenge on the society that caused her death. The show features a blend of Beijing opera and contemporary Americana, including bluegrass, Delta blues, Appalachian, Tex-Mex and Cajun music composed by Paul Dresher and performed by the Boston-based band Andromeda. Loeb Drama Center, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-547-8300). www.amrep.org. $35–$69.

THU./NOV. 20

Music: Two Turntables and No Microphone

What's with kids these days? Nobody wants to pick up a guitar and rock anymore. They just want to sit in their rooms and fiddle with record players, making those wicky-wicky noises. And they've got plenty of role models. "Turntablism" has been a growing art form for years now, and the Scratch Tour presents some of its most skilled practitioners and innovators, like the X-Ecutioners, Z-Trip and QBert, as well as old-school originators like Jazzy Jay. Loosely linked to the hip-hop documentary of the same name, the Scratch Tour emphasizes the difference between a DJ, who simply plays tunes, and a turntablist, who uses records and turntables as tools to create new music. With a focus on mixing, scratching and turntable trickery and hijinks, these vinyl virtuosos pull off solos that would make Eddie Van Halen stop in his tracks. Say, maybe there's some rock left in the kids after all. Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-423-NEXT). 8 pm, $20, 19+.

The X-Ecutioners come to Avalon for the Scratch Tour.

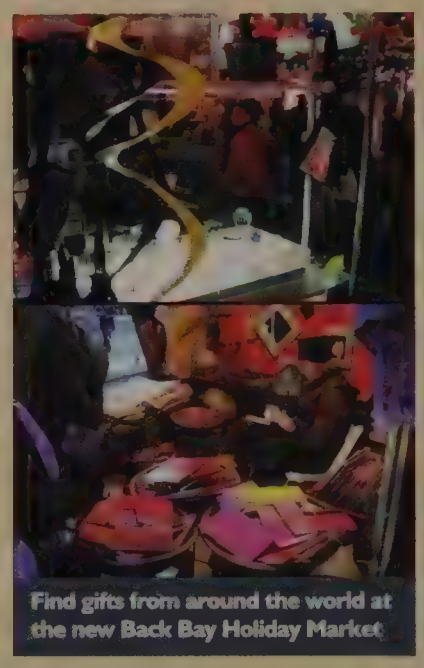
To Market

The Back Bay Holiday Market makes its debut outside the Prudential Center



Find gifts from around the world at the new Back Bay Holiday Market

By now you've realized that your friends don't want another picture frame or "Kiss the Chef" apron for the holidays. You've also realized that finding a good gift is hard work. The Back Bay Holiday Market might help ease the burden. More than 60 vendors from Massachusetts and beyond have set up for the season outside the Prudential Center to sell unusual gifts.

For bookworms, consider Michael and Sally Daner's Hookmarks. Michael calls the couple's Hookmarks "book jewelry," and he's not too far off. These hooked bookmarks are made of sterling silver–, gold-, or silver-plated brass, and are adorned at the hooked end with anything from an ancient coin design to a Swarovski crystal. Hookmarks cost $10–$40 each.

Handmade pottery is another gift that departs from the mass-produced mundane. At the Potteryville booth you can find pieces—festive red vases, goblin jugs and more—by potters from North Carolina, India and elsewhere.

The market, open until Christmas Eve, also sells sheepskin accessories, wooden boxes from Poland, ceramics from Turkey, Zimbabwean sculpture, Peruvian chess sets, soaps from Greece—the list goes on and on. Maybe this year, when your niece thanks you, she'll actually mean it.

Prudential Center, Boylston Plaza, through Dec. 24. Hours through Nov. 26: Mon.-Sat., 10 am-8 pm; Sun, 11 am-6 pm. Closing times extended one hour Nov. 28-Dec. 24.

Crowe's Nest

The star sails on Peter Weir's naval epic

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Has there ever been a naval battle sequence quite as jarring as the one that opens Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World? It takes place on a foggy, initially quiet morning off the coast of Brazil in April 1805, in the midst of the Napoleonic wars. Britain's HMS Surprise is suddenly set upon by the French vessel Acheron, which slips out of the fog and repeatedly pounds the Surprise with cannon fire that shears its wooden railings, splits its mast and penetrates its decks and hull. You're forgiven if you flinch to avoid the flying splinters of wood, or cringe as the impacts send bodies flying.

Russell Crowe stars as Captain "Lucky Jack" Ambrose in Peter Weir's new epic, Master and Commander.

Director Peter Weir, in his first movie since The Truman Show, makes the battle all the more intense by not laying music over the battle noises, frantic dialogue and ever-present creaks and squeaks of wooden boats on the high seas. So there are no musical cues pushing us toward certain emotions or telegraphing important events. Like the characters onboard, including Captain "Lucky Jack" Ambrose (Russell Crowe) and ship's scientist and doctor Stephen Maturin (Paul Bettany), we're left to our own devices.

This early action also mixes in great little glimpses of what life on the sea 200 years ago involved, such as the groups of men working the manual pumps in the ship's bowels to bail out water let in by the cannonball holes, or the hurried prebattle preparations in which men scurry to battle stations while others clear the decks and rooms of any objects that aren't nailed down. And, in an amazing battle detail, when the French attack knocks out most of the Surprise's sailing capacity, the English pull off an amazing escape by dropping three lifeboats, tethering them to the big ship and having a dozen sailors in each boat row like crazy.

That remarkable opening battle and Weir's realistic storytelling—especially compared with the last big naval battle movie, the melodramatic confection Pearl Harbor—help Master and Commander sail over dull patches, gabby interludes and hohum subplots. Its level of authenticity is so much higher than any mere piece of spectacle.

Not that the quieter moments are always the meat of the film, which is based on a series of novels by the late Patrick O'Brian. The characters of Ambrose and Maturin appear in many of them, but the movie isn't always convincing in portraying the two as lifelong best friends. (The pair's musical respites with Ambrose on violin and Maturin on cello are silly, and Bettany is a colorless performer, especially next to robust Crowe.) Those characters fit their larger functions in the story, though. Although Ambrose is hardly brutish (in fact, he's more worldly than all but a few men would have been in 1805), he is unscientific, and his famous battle skill relies as much on hunch as knowledge. Maturin is, of course, a scientist, and when the ship docks in the Galapagos Islands and he observes wildlife there, it's obvious we're supposed to see him as a forerunner to Darwin.

So Ambrose and Maturin represent, essentially, the physical and mental sides of man, and a running joke in the movie is that Ambrose's pledges to give Maturin time for science always get deferred by his quest to pursue the Acheron around Cape Horn. The shipmates' philosophical struggle is the real battle in Master and Commander, but it can't compare with the more explosive and more cinematic battle between the English and French ships.

The other great compliment you can pay these battles—and there is indeed a climactic rematch—is that the special effects are rarely obvious, although there must be a ton in the movie, especially during a ferocious storm sequence. For once, the effects serve the story in a big movie, and not the other way around. And despite its battle prowess, Master and Commander is anything but gung ho. With cannonballs ripping through boats as well as people, and realism a priority (check out the amputation scene), you feel the loss of war in this one. After all, Weir is the man who gave us one of the most tragic war movies ever made, Gallipoli. iB

Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World ★★★

Directed by Peter Weir. Written by Weir and John Collee, based on the novels of Patrick O'Brian. With Russell Crowe and Paul Bettany. Rated PG-13. Twentieth Century Fox.

New Releases

The Human Stain ★★★
I wouldn't call Robert (Twilight) Benton's adapta tion of Philip Roth's novel well made—it's unfo cused and bursting with loose ends, and Ga Sinise's character is deadwood that might hav been trimmed away. But for the most part, this ta of a retired professor (Anthony Hopkins) with secret, and the emotionally wounded younge lover (Nicole Kidman) he takes up with, is involv ing. Hopkins employs unexpected restraint, whil Kidman's stretch as a self-destructive, workin class divorcée is impressive. (At Boston Commo Kendall Square and suburbs.)

In America ★★★
My Left Foot director Jim Sheridan's semiautobio graphical drama about a young Irish family's mov to New York sometimes has a TV-movie feel, pe haps because it's told from the perspective of on of the wide-eyed daughters. But there's dramati meat in the tale. The family has left Ireland fo lowing the death of one child, and the mo (Samantha Morton), dad (Paddy Considine) an two young daughters (Sarah Bolger, Emma Bolge bring a mixture of grief and optimism to their ne home. Sheridan's tale turns out to be about feelin at home—be it in your surroundings, your life your own skin—and his characters' emotiona journey is worth taking. Morton's fragile woma on-the-edge schtick has gotten pretty tire though. (At Kendall Square.)

In the Cut ★★
Subtext isn't so interesting when the text above is uninvolving. That's what you get in this thrill in which director Jane Campion (The Piano seems bored with the serial-killer whodunit th drives the story. Campion seems more concerne with the repressed teacher (Meg Ryan) who gets touch with her wrapped-up desires when a hom cide detective (Mark Ruffalo) turns into her litt guilty pleasure. The undercurrent spotlighting th woman in peril in a voyeuristic society of ma predators might have worked had Campio pumped more energy into the story and less in the artsy cinematography and editing. (At Boste Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Intolerable Cruelty ★★★
It's "Coen Brothers lite" in a way, as The B Lebowski brothers have revised a pre-existin script for their latest and co-produced it wi Brian Grazer (A Beautiful Mind). But even if th absurdity only occasionally hits the Coens' usu pitch (especially during a hilarious trial scene this fast-paced battle-of-the-sexes comedy is sti very funny. George Clooney is just right as a va divorce attorney with no conscience—no one el today can do a movie star turn as he can—whi curvaceous Catherine Zeta Jones keeps right with him as the golddigger who turns out to be h match in more ways than one. (At Boston Com mon, Fenway and suburbs.)

Kill Bill—Vol. 1 ★★
Within the first few minutes of Volume 1 Quentin Tarantino's long-awaited action epic the second half arrives in February—you get fo 1970s references. There's the Shaw Brother "Shawscope" logo from the team's old martial films, the swirly "Our Feature Presentation" int that cinemas showed back then, a circa-19 Klingons reference and a taste of the Iron theme song. Those references go to show th Tarantino's style, cool and clever a decade ago now only as adventurous as an episode of VH1 Love the '70s. Make that VH1 with literal geyse of blood. Tarantino's story is a revenge tale wi Uma Thurman as a modern-day warrior seeki revenge on the assassins who left her for dead. T pop-cultural quotes come fast and hard—spaghe westerns, Japanese manga comics, Tarantino's o Reservoir Dogs, etc.—so much so that you wish would just settle down and let his characters words do their jobs, as in the movie's best quence, when the warrior enlists a philosophic Okinawan sword maker (Sonny Chiba). Let's ho the second half has more stretches like that. Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square a suburbs.)

Lost in Translation ★★★½
Sofia Coppola dealt with shared pain in her 20 directorial debut, The Virgin Suicides, and she co jures up a similar funny-sad tone in her tale of t Americans (Bill Murray, Scarlett Johansson) ad in Tokyo. He's a washed-up movie star making bundle endorsing Japanese booze; she's the wife a work-consumed photographer (Giovan Ribisi). They're staying at the same hotel a killing time at the same hotel bar, and their misery loves company. The characters make a great movie couple, although their relationship is platonic (with its share of sexual tension). Murray gives a Buster Keaton–like, sad-clown performance built mainly around physical and especially facial reactions to absurd situations, and Johansson is a little heartbreaker. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Love Actually ★★

Veteran English writer Richard Curtis (Four Weddings and a Funeral) makes his directorial debut with this shameless romantic comedy, which operates under the same say-it-loud and pile-on-the-exclamation-points concept as the oversized greeting card. In his movie's case, that means he piles on about eight half-baked romantic subplots, hoping they'll miraculously accumulate into one big plot. If only. Nearly all of these subplots are flimsy and shallow, especially one with Hugh Grant as the new English prime minister. Unfortunately, Grant is back to his pre-2000 bumbling. Bill Nighy, as a desperate, aging rock star, and Rowan Atkinson (a frequent Curtis collaborator) add genuine comic relief occasionally. But a romantic movie as weak as this should not be allowed to use a song as good as the Beach Boys' "God Only Knows" during its climax. There oughta be a law. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Matrix Revelations ★★

The first Matrix had a thrilling sense of discovery, but ultimately, this trilogy had little to offer once that initial thrill was gone. How did that lively original ever morph into the ponderous, self-important saga in this second sequel? They ought to hand you Cliffs Notes going into this one, because unless you're a no-lifer who's seen the previous movies 10 times, it's hard to follow the many plot intricacies, and the movie does little to reacquaint you. As in the first sequel, the bad guys—specifically Hugo Weaving's Agent Smith and Lambert Wilson and Monica Bellucci's Eurotrash couple—offer most of the fun. Aside from Jada Pinkett Smith, the heroes are robotic stiffs, while the fight scenes verge on self-parody and the Neo-as-Christ climax is worth a snicker or three. (At Boston Common, Fenway, suburbs and IMAX theaters.)

Meg Ryan and Mark Ruffalo star in Jane Campion's new psychological thriller, In the Cut.

Mystic River ★★

Where are Robert Mitchum and The Friends of Eddie Coyle when you need them? Clint Eastwood's adaptation of Dennis Lehane's novel would like to be the same sort of somber, blue-collar crime story as that 1970s Boston-shot classic. But this disappointing film is plodding and literally and figuratively murky. Eastwood assembles a great cast whose efforts don't always pay off, especially Sean Penn, whose character, Jimmy, suffers most from the loss of the novel's background detail. Kevin Bacon and Tim Robbins play the other two childhood friends whose fates become intertwined anew when Jimmy's daughter is murdered—one is the detective investigating the crime and the other is the prime suspect. As a whodunit, this is competent enough, but its ambitions run larger than that, and its reach exceeds its grasp. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Pieces of April ★★★

Black humor and optimism blend surprisingly well in this story of the title character (Katie Holmes) fixing Thanksgiving dinner for her visiting family. While she deals with kitchen problems in her Manhattan apartment, like finding a neighbor who'll let her use a stove after she realizes hers doesn't work, we also see the family (including dad Oliver Platt and ill mom Patricia Clarkson) trekking their way downstate to see her. The feeling of dread is mutual for the black-sheep daughter and her disappointed parents, and the colorful cast pulls off the heightened reality in writer-director Peter Hedges' story. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Runaway Jury ★★★

The latest John Grisham adaptation is a fun popcorn thriller, with Gene Hackman's cynical jury consultant stealing the movie. Hackman and his minions' appetite for jury members' dirty secrets—all the better to twist their arms with—would do Edgar Hoover proud. John Cusack and Rachel Weisz are in on the fun, too, as one person in the jury and one outside the jury who've teamed to sway the votes to the highest bidder in a high-profile case against gun manufacturers. As the crusading plaintiff's attorney, Dustin Hoffman has the left-out look of a teetotaler at happy hour. The movie occasionally acts like Hoffman's character too, especially during its earnest last few scenes, but this courtroom drama zips by. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

School of Rock ★★★½

Jack Black has the big-screen breakthrough he's been destined for ever since his scene-stealing role in High Fidelity. Here, he's a failed rock-and-roller who impersonates a substitute teacher and schools his fourth-graders to be his new band. Writer Mike White, who also plays a supporting role, tailors the story to Black's manic talents, and he and director Richard Linklater (Dazed & Confused) take what could have been a lame David Spade or Rob Schneider movie and made a very funny, genuinely feel-good movie. So, the next time one of those painful movies starring a Saturday Night Live cast member comes out, remember it didn't have to be so bad. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Shattered Glass ★★★

The story of Stephen Glass, the hotshot New Republic reporter who turned out to have faked many of his articles, becomes a fascinating drama that avoids the usual stodginess of docudramas. Instead of showing us the hows and whys of Glass' fakery—does anyone really know that besides Glass himself?—the movie presents Glass (Hayden Christensen) as an eager-to-please go-getter who appears to be taken in himself by his own veneer of guilelessness (and also appears to be the best coworker anyone could ever have). That selfception may be the biggest and most interesting deceit in the movie, which also touches upon entertainment's dangerous seductive power over journalism. The strong supporting cast includes Peter Saarsgard, Chloe Sevigny, Hank Azaria and Melanie Lynskey. (At Kendall Square.)

The Singing Detective ★★

If it ain't broke, don't fix it. So why this two-hour adaptation of Dennis Potter's deeply involving seven-hour 1980s miniseries? Naturally, much of the drama gets dulled by the abridgement of Potter's tale of a writer trapped in the hospital by a debilitating case of psoriasis. In its full-strength form, it's an intoxicating mix of present-day action, the detective story reeling inside the writer's head (which casts him as a glib gumshoe), surreal hallucinations (usually involving Potter's trademark device of characters lip-synching to old tunes) and childhood flashbacks revealing the writer's emotional scars. Potter wrote the screenplay before his 1994 death, so it touches upon his main points, but there isn't a single aspect in which the movie matches up to its miniseries predecessor. (At Copley Place and Harvard Square.)

The Station Agent ★★★

This comedy about a dwarf (Peter Dinklage) who moves into an abandoned train depot in a small New Jersey town might have been a cloyingly quirky indie film. Instead, it's a pretty special experience. Dinklage's deadpan performance as Fin wryly captures how his character's expectations of his fellow man have been pounded down by their reaction to his height. Broader comedy comes from Bobby Canavale, as a food-truck owner who tries to befriend Fin, and Patricia Clarkson, as a woman escaping a fizzled marriage whom Fin tries to befriend. There's a wise and endearing clash of humanity here, and an unpredictable story to go along with it. Along with Pieces of April (see page 64), another brittle yet funny Clarkson performance. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

21 Grams ★★

Director Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu used time to great effect in his bracing debut, Amores Perros. In his follow-up (his first American-made movie), his use of nonlinear structure doesn't go so smoothly. Again Gonzalez blends three stories—of a newly widowed woman (Naomi Watts), a born-again ex-con (Benicio Del Toro) and a terminally ill professor (Sean Penn)—but the film's first half is so hyperactive that it's hard to get into it. That's when the action jumps so often—in time, and among the three characters—that it lacks a center. When the film finally settles down, and we see the three lives intersect, the action gets genuinely dramatic at last, and Watts' raw performance is especially compelling. But that first half is a big price to pay to get to the second. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Spiritual Archaeology

With the reconstituted Waterboys, Mike Scott shares new inspiration

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Back in 1985, when U2 had just ignited its unforgettable fire, the Waterboys swept out of the British Isles with "The Whole of the Moon," a similar slice of big-beat rock with spiritual import. Then, rather than follow formula, the Waterboys embraced a fiddle-laced Irish traditional lift for its 1988 standout LP, Fisherman's Blues.

But leader Mike Scott made one shift too many in 1990 when he condensed the Waterboys to a more typical rock lineup—and lost both fiddler Steve Wickham and the band's audience in the process. Scott disbanded the group to make two solo albums, and he admits, "I recognized the brand name, if you like, after 10 years of Waterboys records and tours, had much more effect."

For his second solo CD, Scott had begun to play with other musicians again. But it didn't feel right under his own name. "I realized, if I play with a band, it's got to be the Waterboys," says the Scottish-born musician. "There's an extra, indefinable magic, something bigger than me that comes into play when it's the Waterboys name."

Mike Scott leads the Waterboys at Berklee Performance Center Dec. 5

So the Waterboys have returned, with Dublin-bred fiddler Wickham back in the fold. On the heels of its 2001 comeback disc, A Rock in the Weary Land, the group has solidified its standing with a new CD, Universal Hall, and the Waterboys' first acoustic tour of America, which comes to Berklee Performance Center Dec. 5.

"I felt free as an artist to follow where my fascination is," says Scott, 44, who was influenced by Bob Dylan, the Rolling Stones and punk rock when he was a teenager, then was drawn to Hank Williams, country, blues and gospel in his twenties. "All of those had a big effect. They became colors of the palette that I'd use when I paint songs."

Lyrics play a huge role in his writing as well. Scott takes a more direct, personal approach to spirituality on the new CD, named after a concert hall at the Findhorn Foundation Community, a spiritual campus where he lives in Scotland.

"Spirituality has to be a practical, daily experience," Scott says from London. "Otherwise, it's meaningless."

One new song, "Peace of Iona," celebrates a Scottish island sacred to both Christian and Druid history. And while the music on Universal Hall is comparable to the past work of Scott and the Waterboys, songs such as "This Light is for the World" and "The Christ in You" may give the impression that he's shifting closer to Christian music. But Scott contends he doesn't belong to any specific religion.

"I've always felt that there's a lot more to spirituality than Christianity," he says. "I'm not talking about Jesus Christ. I'm talking about the Christ energy, what Jesus was infused with—at least in my understanding. To me, the Christ is the presence of God in every individual."

Findhorn attracts people from many religious backgrounds, Scott says. "When you get 500 to 600 people all committed to working on their spirituality, especially the kind of nonoppressive spirituality that's practiced at Findhorn, it creates a very powerful, transformative atmosphere."

Scott has appeared solo, with the Waterboys, and as a "community musician" backing other singers at Universal Hall, a striking, polygonal theater. "It has seating in steep rows like Berklee, and performers play on the floor in the middle," he says. "It's almost like playing in the round."

The Waterboys settled into a small studio beneath the hall to record the disc, and while much of the music was sparely arranged, touching on solo, duo and trio settings, there was room for experimentation. Besides his usual guitars and keyboards, Scott is credited for loop "archeology," "earth resonator" (a bass guitar played through organ speakers) and "fireworm," a guitar fed through a micro-synthesizer.

"I call it a fireworm, because that's what it sounds like," says Scott, who uses the setup on "Seek the Light," a psychedelic march with fuzzed-out vocals. "I love putting effects on instruments that aren't meant to be on those instruments."

The Waterboys' U.S. tour will be more stripped down, featuring Scott, Wickham and pianist Richard Naiff—today's core incarnation of a band that once included Karl Wallinger, who left to launch the group World Party, and Anthony Thistlethwaite, of late with the Saw Doctors.

The shows will draw from Universal Hall as well as material from throughout the Waterboys and Scott catalogs. However, fans shouldn't expect to hear "The Whole of the Moon."

"Generally my songs translate easily to the acoustic format, but 'Whole' is different," Scott says. "Getting a real keyboard player to duplicate the way I played it on the record is like asking Picasso to draw the funnies for the New York Post. I play in sort of a caveman style: one finger on one hand, and three on the other!" iB

Rising Again

Rise is back with a new and improved after-hours party

Boston's members-only after-hours club, Rise, is set to reopen its doors on Nov. 28 for a weekend-long extravaganza. The club was shuttered by a fire in a neighboring business nearly a year and a half ago, and its reopening was delayed in the wake of the Station nightclub fire in Rhode Island. Rise owners Tom Beaulieu and Darrin Morda originally opened the club five years ago to provide a safe space for people to dance all night, so the Rhode Island tragedy caused them to rethink their plans while refurbishing. The rebuilt club includes new safety features, such as a sprinkler system, and also boasts upgraded sound, lighting and video.

"Two things come to mind," says Beaulieu, describing his favorite moments at Rise. "One of them is when I look out on the dance floor and see such a diverse group of people enjoying the music and space—black, white, gay, straight, male and female. It makes me very proud that we've been able to create this place where the walls of society can come down. The second thing, and it almost brings me to tears, is watching someone react to entering the club for the first time. They go from being a bit nervous and curious to happy and excited. You can see it in their eyes and it's a really great thing to watch."

The grand reopening weekend hosts a spectacular DJ lineup and extended hours. Orbit on Friday features a special double bill with Rise residents Steve Porter and John Debo; Storm on Saturday features Montreal's Mark Anthony; and Boston's own Richie LaDue takes over for Earth on Sunday.

Although Rise is a private, members-only club, it is now welcoming new members. Anyone interested in joining must be sponsored by an existing member.

306 Stuart St., Boston (617-423-7473). Opening weekend, 1 am-7 am; regular weekends, 1:30 am-6:30 am. $10 members, $15 guests ($20 for guests on opening weekend). 18 +.

"Can You Kiss Me" & "Just Remember"

13 consecutive weeks in the TOP 13 HOTTEST PICKS!!

"Pure rock, the kind people like to hear... extreme music– extremely listenable, extremely likeable... ★★★★"

–Christine Welsh, Hippo Press

"LaMarsh's new CD certainly sounds as good as anything you've heard on the radio this year. 'Can You Kiss Me' could be a breakout hit. Its cheeky vitality almost impossible to resist."

Reaching for the Ring

A photography exhibition captures professional wrestling dreams

The WWE's soap opera–like matches and over-the-top characters like Stone Cold Steve Austin and the Rock have pushed professional wrestling's popularity to ridiculous heights over the past few years. Thanks to behind-the-scenes documentaries on wrestling schools and the MTV reality series Tough Enough, more and more young adults know where to go to pursue their dream of becoming a professional wrestler. Hard Boys & Bad Girls, Thomas McGovern's new exhibition in the Emerging Artist Gallery at Winchester's Griffin Museum of Photography, examines those looking to become the next big sensation in the ring.

Iron Warrior shows in Hard Boys & Bad Girls at the Griffin Museum.

The California-based photographer stumbled upon the School of Hard Knocks wrestling academy in his hometown of San Bernardino. Intrigued by the number of students and the entertainment aspect of the sport, McGovern decided to focus his lens on the aspiring stars. "As an artist, I really connected with the idea that these young men and women were pursuing a far-fetched dream," says McGovern. "Even though most of them aren't particularly well educated, they are keenly aware of how photography constructs an identity and blurs fiction into fact." His ongoing project consists of in-character portraits of the men and women of the School of Hard Knocks paired with action shots. "I'm not trying to reveal what these people are really like," adds McGovern. "There's great manipulation going on with any image. These kids seem to understand it, and I find it fascinating and provocative."

Hard Boys & Bad Girls. Through Jan. 15, 2004. Griffin Museum of Photography, 67 Shore Rd., Winchester. (781-729-1158). www.griffinmuseum.org. Tue.-Sun. 12-4 pm. $5 adults.

MONTAUK

He left me. Good riddance.

He never picked up his socks.

He thought I was his mother. He didn't make me laugh anymore. He's gone.

Who cares... All I wanted was the sofa and the dogs.

OLAF OLAFSSON Walking Into the Night

In their starred review, here's what Kirkus has to say about Icelandic-born Olaf Olafsson's new novel, Walking Into the Night: "Clear-eyed and captivating, Olafsson writes effortlessly, seemingly incapable of a dull paragraph or page. His people are real, period atmosphere and detail unobtrusively perfect, his novel a gem and a small masterpiece." See you there.

Prince Street Princess

Thursday, Oct. 23: Wow. As I walked out of my pad to mail money to Mastercard, I was struck by the beautiful sight of you, walking up Prince Street. Hmm...how could I get your attention as we walked and weaved our way toward your Salem Street stop? Pizza at Ernesto's never seemed so absolutely appetizing. Is this just another sexy smile that slips silently away, or something surely special that deserves a date?! You: jeans and a brown top, sunglasses, smile, sexy. Me: happy, hungry (for pizza?) and here.

Asian Beauty at Lord & Taylor

We exchanged several glances in the men's section of the downtown Lord & Taylor on Oct. 18. I sensed an instant attraction, but wasn't able to speak with you. You are a petite Asian beauty with amazing long black hair. You checked out (a gift for your father?) at the men's store register closest to the door on Boylston Street. I had on khakis and a blue shirt and have a goatee and a tan. I'd love to get a second chance for an introduction and possibly a shopping date!

To the Company That Fired Me

No, I am breaking up with you. I thought we were finished until you called, after I had been terminated, to ask some questions about work I had left behind. It proved to me how incompetent you are, but unfortunately, I'm the one with the stigma of being fired. But I want to set the record straight.

I was embarrassed every time you brought clients through the office to see broken computer parts and messy files, never mind the "quirky" receptionist. It felt like you cheated on me when I found out an intern was paid more per hour than I was just because they were related to a client. I felt like you didn't listen when I insisted I had done everything asked of me, and practically begged you to spy on me so I could prove it. It was humiliating to have packages ripped open to see if I'd placed the correct cover sheet in them.

But there were good times. You made me laugh when you confessed you had no idea what our clients did. I agreed you were "fashion mavens" in your sweater dresses. I loved the hours of discussions about pie charts. And I formed a survivors' unit with some amazing co-workers.

It hurt that the salary and training I was given didn't seem to equal what the contract promised, and supervisors' salaries were tripled so they could shop J. Crew online all day. But I know money doesn't buy them happiness, which is the one thing I've got since you fired me.

So I am breaking up with you. Myself and other exes will get together for drinks and chat about how lousy you were. We're going to remember how badly you dressed, how low you paid and how unprofessional you acted when you didn't get your way. We're going to have a great time.

Starbucks Regret

On Nov. 4 I went into the Starbucks on School Street in Boston to buy a newspaper. You came in and got in line right behind me and noticed that the tag on my shirt was hanging out. You told me this and then very gently tucked it back in. We chatted about my work and about you being a full-time student at a local university. I found you to be a charming, beautiful lady whom I would like to know better. I truly regret not following up with you after I bought my newspaper. I've heard it said that people sometimes regret the things they haven't done more than some of the things they have done. That is certainly true in this case. If you are not in a committed relationship at this point and would like to communicate with me further, please contact me. I have much to offer and will be leaving my tag out in hopes of seeing you again.

You Checked Me Out at My Burlington Office Building

It was 5 pm one October afternoon, and I was leaving my office building, which is just off the Middlesex Turnpike in Burlington. You were walking and your path was intersecting mine as I was heading to my car. After I had passed by you I turned around and saw that you were heading towards the door...and then you turned and looked at me...and then we did it again, and again when I reached my car (a red VW Beetle). You are slim, tall, and cute with what appeared to be brown hair. I believe you were wearing a striped blue shirt. I am slim and tall with a blonde shag haircut and I was wearing a black leather jacket, black skirt, and black boots, which I believe is what caught your eye! I am sorry that I didn't smile or say hello to you, but if this sounds like you and you are single and available please e-mail me. And for anyone reading this, if this sounds like I am describing a friend of yours, please let him know!

You: completely belligerent at the 21st Amendment on a recent weekend. You swung your long brown hair, smoked like a chimney, danced to Def Leppard and started fights, all the while never letting go of your Magners cider. Me: completely smitten. Let's go out and paint the town drunk! E-mail me if you want to take a chance.

Lori

We met a few years back (18+ years ago) on a road trip to Toronto. You were 18 or so, and I was a bit younger. I believe you went to Emerson at the time, but I'm not sure. We spent most of the trip up there chatting, and kept in touch for a bit after we got back to Boston. I think you had said that you grew up in New Hampshire. I don't know if you're around this area anymore but if you are and remember me, drop an e-mail.

Shift_Hooking Up

You: silver 350 Z, license plate beginning with 91J. Me: dark red Xterra. I enjoyed our game of cat and mouse on the night of Nov. 9! We started out with you following me somewhere near Tolland, Conn., on 84, then me following you and a BMW trailing me. We finally lost the BMW around Sturbridge and you tailed me, in and out of traffic, to the tolls at the Pike. Once through there, we swapped positions and I kept up until I had to sadly get off onto 95. If you're out there, I'd love to find out who you are!

No Mistake, This Hi's for You

Cafe Delite, Winthrop Center, Oct. 27, around noon: My half of the errands was coffee-fetching, and when I turned to leave, my cohort was standing behind you (you: 6'3"-ish, dark brown hair, crisp blue eyes, great smile). I said hi to her and instead, you answered with an easy hi and that great smile. I was excited and too slow to react, but as we left and I glanced back in and there you were, waiting in line and laughing at yourself, flinging another smile at me (me: 5'6", curly brown hair, large brown eyes, big smile). I work around the corner from there and I can't decide if it's sweet or stalker-ish to go in every office to look for you. Plus, I figure you looked hip enough to be an IMPROPER reader. I'd love to have the chance to greet you intentionally. By the way, I'm cream and sugar...you?

rockie horoscope

SCORPIO OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

The big payoff. Don't be surprised if bribery is the solution to what develops when Venus, the tantalizing flytrap, puts moves on your Pluto co-ruler. Maybe you should claim, "Not my fault, I've been misled!" It's possible that the holiday season won't have such dramatic overtones, but not likely. Whether you're involved with a "holier than thou" organization or immersed in strenuous recreational activities, anticipate having at least two memorable experiences before Santa shows up.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Concentrate on your career, spreading your good name and the rewards that lucky Jupiter in your midheaven can bring. You might not have such easy access to growth opportunities for another four years, which is when your ruling planet will travel through Sagittarius. But nothing comes without a tradeoff: maybe increased tension among family members, maybe an accident in the kitchen. With magnetic Venus in your sign, you'll undoubtedly attract more than your usual share of attention, both the good and the bad kind. Be careful.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

A sudden glitch in a financial matter is probably temporary; while unpredictable Uranus is in your Aquarius money house, there's not much you can do except double check every transaction. This time, the error might involve a social or political organization, maybe a group of your peers. And while you're at it, be on the lookout for holiday charity scams. You're more vulnerable than most. If you're in your isolationist mood, you won't be thrilled to learn that after the 26th, you become the "must have" guest on everyone's party list.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

You can't let down your guard yet; while the sun is illuminating your career midheaven, continue to put your best foot, and face, forward. Who knows? An enticing opportunity could pop up when your Uranus ruler is tested around the 21st. Plus, the seeds of something special may be sown with the new moon/solar eclipse on the 23rd. Remember how your life changed 19 Thanksgivings ago following the previous solar eclipse at 1 Sagittarius? Or failing your failing memory, how about after the lunar eclipses in May of 1993 and 1994?

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Be nice to the girl! Woo the women, and the artists, who can help advance your career or at least say something interesting about you, your work, even your family. This time of year, when Venus, as well as chatty Mercury, is in your Sag midheaven, any sort of gossip can have a positive effect. While your name is being bandied about, it might strike a chord in someone's distant memory. Before you know it, a happy reunion, a well-received revival, maybe, once Venus conspires with Pluto, bittersweet revenge. Enjoy, your back is covered.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Educational opportunities are to the left of you, career opportunities to the right. And you thought Thanksgiving was going to be about family, paying homage to your elders and reminiscing about the traditions you embraced as a child! Uh-uh, kiddo. This holiday get-together has political ramifications popping up all over. You'll fare best, i.e., come out intact, by avoiding the manipulative men and the blatantly seductive woman in the group. Also by giving up on a plan that could be so self-destructive I dare not speak its name.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

The realm of the senses will draw you back from the ethereal place your heightened spirituality may have taken you. Because your pleasure-loving Venus ruler is currently involved with lusty Mars, jolly Jupiter and passionate Pluto, you could be the favorite plaything of quite a few people, e.g., Aries, Pisces, Virgo, Sag and Scorpio. Enjoy the role while you can. The closer we get to Thanksgiving, the more respectable you'll become. Once Venus make the leap from "love the one you're with" Sag to Capricorn on the 26th, the party's over.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Firstly, you're apt to get caught in the crosshairs, then in the cross fire. On your own, you'd be fine; perhaps overly influencing a youngster's request, but no biggie. However, when responding to your parents, boss or a partner, you may be setting yourself up to be screwed. In the future, you can look back on this period and be grateful for the opportunity to dodge these many bullets so gracefully, a true test of Gemini tact and adaptability. But for now, it is best if you walk a fine line, and keep an open mind and your trap shut.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Serious fun with a co-worker, a workout partner or perhaps a mental health professional is keeping you sane. While sociable, affable Venus in your Sagittarius house of work and health touches base with an assortment of service personnel you'll respond accordingly. These contacts may be fleeting and feel somewhat strained, but they'll become eminently rewarding after Thanksgiving weekend. An opportunity to expand your area of expertise and satisfy a taste for adventure, too, may arise on the 20th. Keep the channels of communication open.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Don't let a chance to latch onto a somewhat risky but potentially very profitable opportunity slip past you unnoticed. If there are no bells and whistles announcing its arrival around the 20th, rely on your intuition or, better yet, inside information. Although a bunch of personal planets are congregating in your house of family and entertainment for Thanksgiving, you could have a better time sneaking away just before the holiday and doing something nobody will ever know about.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

A family secret may surface this week, something that could change the way you relate to those folks now and forever more. Ah, yes, another happy Thanksgiving in the offing, with even more to be grateful for. Be sure to give thanks that Virgos can easily adapt to new, even nasty situations, plus, with jolly Jupiter in your sign, that you can make jokes at your own as well as everybody else's expense. Just remember to bite your tongue as you prepare to offer precious pearls of wisdom. Nobody likes a know-it-all.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

You can't help it; this time of year, while your lovable Venus ruler gads about in Sagittarius, you exude a "come and get it" vibe that is irresistible. Try to keep your amorous activities hush-hush, especially as the goddess draws close to sexy Pluto. Otherwise a scandal could erupt and spread like wildfire. Good for the memoirs you one day may write, but not so hot for the neighbors and relatives who could be affected. The new moon on the 23rd is more about bringing in money and stuff than about how you'll disperse it.

Owners Brian Napolean and Matt Robitaille with Steven Tyler.

As new business owners, making a choice in advertising avenues is a difficult decision. Regardless of the size of your advertising budget, you must be selective in choosing the medium that best reaches your target audience. At The Bustonian, we researched many avenues that appeared to be "Win-Win" situations, but when it came decision time, we chose to focus on the Improper Bostonian. Over the past few months, we've established a strong relationship with our Improper representative, Katie Schmidt, who has really helped us get the best response possible from our advertising dollars!!! We've found the entire Improper staff to be extremely nice and helpful. All in all, we're very pleased with the revenue that The Improper Bostonian has helped generate for our new business and we highly recommend investing in the Improper to work for you!!!

Sweet Charity

Boston is a city of giving. In the Boston Charities issue of The Improper Bostonian you will meet innovative individuals who have risen to the challenge of doing good for the local community. Giving to charity doesn't have to mean cash—the Boston Charities issue will give you a guide to the organizations that will accept everything from your outdated cell phone to your old tuxedo for the needy. Also in this issue, The Improper will take you on a tour of Little Portugal. Inman Square's Portuguese neighborhood is a hidden enclave of good food and good people.

Don't miss a chance to be a part of this display of Boston's beneficence!

The Improper Bostonian* reaches more than 392,900 readers every two weeks.

LAST SCENE HERE

OH, THE PARTIES YOU'LL GO TO...

Fat cats! Big stars!
Yummy food! Martini bars!
An auction and schmoozing!
Dancing and boozing!
Under a big striped tent!

That (or something like it) is how Theodor Geisel might have described the Dr. Seuss–inspired Storybook Ball to benefit Mass. General Hospital for Children, held beneath a big top on Boston Common.

All the Whos from Who's-Whoville were there, including comedic force of nature Lenny Clarke and his fishing boat captain wife, Jennifer; Oscar-winning actor Chris Cooper and his Sopranos-star spouse, Marianne Leone Cooper (who was off to New York the next day to film new episodes); acerbic funnyman Denis Leary; Aerosmith hipster Tom Hamilton and his prettier half, Terry; celebrity pediatrician Dr. Murray Feingold; lovely blonde art collector Beth Johnson; car czar Herb Chambers; sexy brunette TV producer Lisa Pierpont and her affable other half, Alex; the dazzlingly toothsome Randi Cutler; blonde bombshell Beth Dickerson and the dashing David Drubner; Back Bay fun couple Courtney and Michael Forrester; the incomparable Jeryl Oristaglio; do-gooding bluebloods Carla and Carlton Cabot; swanlike socialite Patty Ribakoff; and on and on down the list of prominent Sam I Am's. In fact, the evening's only no-show was the event's patron, Her highness, Princess Inaara (the Begum Aga Khan), who was stuck somewhere else but sent along a $150,000 Cartier necklace that some thrifty gazillionaire won in the live auction for a piddling $90,000.

No one could stop commenting on the over-the-top decor, which took a page from The Cat in the Hat and included bars serving jellybeans along with martinis flavored to match, a Vespa (the raffle prize) hanging from the ceiling, puppet rattles as auction paddles, colorfully trippy children's book touches and enough flowers (courtesy of the Winston family) to give Horton a terminal case of hay fever.

Summing up the scene, hospital honcho Dr. Alan Ezekowitz said, "It's Whoville on the Common," and he was right, except that instead of green eggs and ham, guests had to content themselves with Veuve Clicquot and filet mignon, and there was a bit more decolletage on display than your average children's book would allow.

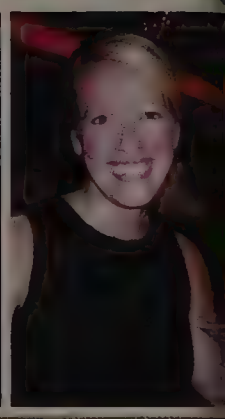
KIDS SAY THE DARNEDEST THINGS...

It's hard to say which was scarier—the spooky costumes or the amount of candy intended for youngsters but consumed by adults—at the Halloween Spectacular fund-raiser to benefit the Max Warburg Courage Curriculum.

The intergenerational party, held in the grand ballroom of the Copley Plaza, featured an appearance by Tito Gaona's Flying Fantasy Circus (complete with clowns on stilts, acrobats and trapeze artists) and attracted the likes of event chair Pamela Humphrey and her husband, John; the charity's founders (and parents of Max), Stephanie and Jonathan Warburg; Channel 4 anchorina Kasey Kaufman and her daughter, Alexa; ex-senatorial spouse Joan Bennett Kennedy; arts patron Marjie Kargman; the improbably gorgeous Nina Fialkow; party pair David and Wendy Murphy with their two little girls, Laura and Jane (dressed like a fairy and a ladybug); Brookline bright young things Douglas and Teresa Choape with their daughter, Clasby (dressed like a little ghoul); and social stalwarts Susan Poduska and Wendy Shattuck (dressed as two of Giorgio Armani's best customers).

"Is that a costume?" one guest asked a friend, who said, "No, this is what I'm wearing to the dinner party I'm going to later."

But the afternoon's funniest exchange came when the guy making balloon animals asked a 5-year-old girl in a vampire get-up what she wanted, and she answered, "An axe."



At the Audrey Hepburn UNICEF party, top row: Jay Calderin and Marie Galvin; Cici Seth. Middle: Nathan Frank, Cynthia Fredrick and Cedric Tonello. Bottom: Sean Hepburn Ferrer and Kim Treacy.

OUR FAIR LADY...

One can't help but wonder if the world wouldn't be in such a sorry state if there were a few more people like Audrey Hepburn. She survived both the Nazis and Hollywood, became a leading lady without ceasing to be a true lady, and worked tirelessly on behalf of the world's children as a goodwill ambassador—all the while looking like the illustration in the dictionary next to the word "stylish." Who better then, to honor at a gala to benefit the U.S. Fund for UNICEF?

The evening started with a private reception at the Ritz-Carlton hosted by Hepburn's son, Sean Hepburn Ferrer (who recently published a memoir about his mother), and it attracted such local arbiters of taste as milliner Marie Galvin; fashion designer Jay Calderin; PR powerhouse Jan Saragoni; jewelry pusher Cedric Tonello (the new GM of Cartier); Cambridge glam our couple Bill and Sally Fay Cottingham; thoroughbred racehorse syndicator Cynthia Fredrick; and the absurdly gorgeous Cici Seth, to name only a handful.

After a few cocktails, everyone headed over to the Loews Boston Common for a screening of the Hepburn classic Funny Face, followed by an after-party in a space transformed for the evening into a café on the Left Bank. All in all, a delightful time on a par with, say, a Roman holiday or having breakfast at Tiffany's. IB

FROM THE EDITOR

THE ART OF GIVING

Between parties, gift buying, travel, and family bonding, your schedule's probably pretty booked this time of year. But with this issue, we hope to inspire you to add one more item to your to-do list: doing some good for others.

Finding a cause you're passionate about is the first step, and with thousands of nonprofit groups in the Boston area alone, there are plenty to choose from. In "Making a Difference" (page 18), writer Martha Mangelsdorf offers just a tiny sample of the interesting local projects you may not have heard of yet—from a tutoring program for preschoolers to a shelter for homeless mothers that also sustains an urban farm.

Even if you've not a penny or a free day to spare, you can still help those in need with the gift of worldly goods. Julie Suratt's story "Creative Charity" (page 24) is a guide to the groups that can put your old eyeglasses, formal gowns, bikes, computers and even leftover banquet food to good use.

Our message here, if we've been too subtle: Get involved, no matter how small the contribution. Nearly 400,000 people read this magazine—if everyone did one small thing, that would amount to something big.

THE GAY WAY IS A-OK

My husband grooms and dresses impeccably. He cooks like a chef (there is no greater turn-on), has a great body that he takes care of, does volunteer work every week and has a spiritual relationship with God. We go to shows in London together. He's a fabulous father. He doesn't play sports, eat fast food or drink beer. He's very romantic, very funny and very straight. While I found your article amusing ("Straight Eye for the Queer Guy," Nov. 19), why do we have to lump every clean, attractive man into the "gay" category and every fat, dirty slob into the "straight" category?

To be honest, I would love to see straight men praised for acting a little "gayer." Go ahead, men: Wear lip balm, take a cooking class, mentor a child, introduce yourself to the arts, learn to dress, volunteer, pamper yourselves, take pride in your bodies and in your souls. Discover the "Renaissance man" that you can be. Any woman in her right mind is a lot more attracted to that than the "stereotypical straight man."

WELL HUNGOVER

"Hangover Helper" (Nov. 19) was a riot. Does Mr. Graham have tips for any other holiday traditions, such as regifting? Or public places to hide the Christmas tree if you're not sure you're allowed to leave it in the road after Valentine's Day? I look forward to his next IMPROPER appearance.

UNIFORMLY BORING

Your "Clothes Call" article (Nov. 5) was enlightening. I just wish you and your panel had explored that universally dull and unimaginative uniform that has engulfed fashion nation: For men it's a blue shirt with khaki or cargo pants; for women it's a black shirt or blouse with tan or khaki pants.

People who choose this boring combination should be escorted to a room by the fashion police and beaten with axe handles.

EATING CROWE

Captain Jack Ambrose? How could your movie reviewer confound such a conspicuous detail as the main character's name (Master and Commander, Nov. 19)? Makes one wonder how closely he paid attention to the movie. That would be like a reviewer of a Star Trek movie repeatedly referring to Captain James Kirk as James Kaplan. What gives? It's AUBREY! Captain Jack Aubrey!

TO BE HONEST, I WOULD LOVE TO SEE STRAIGHT MEN PRAISED FOR ACTING A LITTLE "GAYER."

WHOLE HOG

When we heard that the venerable House of Blues was to become a barbecue joint, our first thought was, "Oh no!" We were so attached to Redbones, our favorite barbecue spot in nearby Davis Square, that we were immediately skeptical. But we duly paid a visit to Brother Jimmy's to check out the newcomer...and 10 crispy hush puppies dripping with maple butter later (plus a bowl of creamy mac and cheese and a bunch of tangy barbecued wings), we were sold. Here's serious BBQ competition.

The vast space still has a downstairs dining area and a spacious upstairs with a long bar and a stage, where, starting soon, bands will belt out blues-based rock and New Orleans funk three nights a week. The theme, according to owner Josh Lebowitz, is "a tour of Southern barbecue," with an emphasis on North Carolina slow-cooked meats. "Some people say that's where pulled pork was invented," says Lebowitz. "Down South, they'll barbecue the whole hog and pick the meat off. Northerners don't want to see a whole pig on a spit, so we serve it chopped up."

To get the real Southern feel, Lebowitz, who owns three other Brother Jimmy's in New York, imported an 800-pound smoker from Oklahoma and decorated the joint with Southern-themed trinkets like tobacco baskets and ACC pennants. (Lebowitz is a huge college sports fan and plans to show all the games.) Park yourself at a wooden picnic table and indulge in a combo plate of three different types of ribs: Southern (coated with a crushed pepper–and–vinegar sauce), Northern (wet and saucy), and dry rub (a mixture of 30 different spices). You can wash it all down with swamp water—a potent concoction that's served in a fish bowl with a plastic alligator stuck in it—or some wallet-friendly $2 PBRs. "We're a home away from home for Southerners," Lebowitz says. And now for Northerners as well. 96 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-547-7427).

CHIC & CHARITABLE

Finding gifts for friends with impeccable taste is challenging enough. Finding them something that won't break the bank is nearly impossible. Local jewelry designer Josie Hewitt's JoJo line features glamorous necklaces, bracelets and earrings that would catch any girl's eye. Some of the bigger baubles run over $200, but her Austrian crystal bracelet with a star-shaped, mother-of-pearl charm retails for a modest $20. Still not sold? JoJo is donating 100 percent of the holiday season proceeds from the bracelet to Toys for Tots. So your gift will touch more than just one. Here's to being charming, cheap and charitable all at once. www.jojoware.com.

ANDRE DUBUS III

Four years after Andre Dubus III's somber novel House of Sand and Fog became an Oprah's Book Club pick, topped best-seller lists and was nominated for the National Book Award, the Newburyport resident (and former IMPROPER cover boy) awaits the release of the big-screen version of his book. Dubus' first foray into the land of Hollywood novelists is no B-list affair. The Dreamworks picture, which opens Dec. 26, stars two Academy Award winners— Jennifer Connelly as a recovering drug addict and Ben Kingsley as a former Iranian colonel—whose characters battle over a foreclosed property. Dubus chatted with us about the transition from page to screen.

IB: Whenever a book is adapted for film, people always say the book is better. What do you think in this case?

AD: Well I'm the wrong guy to ask because I wrote the book. I do think if people like this book, they'll like the movie. It's very loyal to the essence of the book.

IB: How much involvement did you have with the film?

AD: Very little. Vadim Perelman, the writer and director, was kind enough to include me in the loop. He sent me drafts and took my input and editing suggestions. And I went out to the set and made a cameo appearance. It was a very surreal and gratifying experience.

IB: Ben Kingsley and Jennifer Connelly, both Academy Award winners, headline the film. Did you picture anyone else in their roles?

AD: I always thought Kingsley. My wife actually sent him the book just after it was released, and I thought there was no way he would ever read it. And he loved it and signed on. For Jennifer Connelly, [her character] Kathy Nicolo is a working-class, Italian-American Saugus type. And [Connelly] is so refined. I just never thought she would do it. But she proved me wrong.

IB: Did you have any say in the casting?

AD: No. I'm not J.K. Rowling. When [Perelman] first asked me, "Who the hell can play the Colonel?" I said "Kingsley."

IB: Did you picture this book being made into a film when you were writing it?

AD: No. Never. Every now and then it's a fantasy I have over a couple of beers, like, "Hey, wouldn't that be cool." But for me, the thing is the book. Anything after that is gravy.

IB: Obviously the film isn't exactly the same as the novel. In particular, the ending is quite different. Is it hard to see your work changed?

AD: Well, it was hard for me when I read the script. I called, and we had fights about it. You know, civil arguments. But I learned something here. A good adaptation isn't just a literal translation. Ultimately, I love where it went, and I was totally surprised to see how it works.

IB: Do you think you'll be the next John Grisham or Michael Crichton?

AD: Well, actually my first novel, Bluesman, is very close to being made into a film. It's been optioned for the last 10 years, and it looks like they're very close to packaging a deal.

IB: So you'll be a household name soon?

AD: Whatever. I just want to write well.

THAI TALK

Real Thai...Back Bay's Chilli Duck has introduced a second menu to its offerings: authentic Thai. The new menu features appetizers, entrées and noodle soups that are hard to find in a typical Thai restaurant in America. Chilli's Annie Ruang warns that the authentic Thai dishes are for "the person who really loves hot and spicy" foods. Pad Thai lovers fear not—Chilli Duck still offers its old menu too. 829 Boylston St., Boston (617-236-5208).

Cosmopolitan

Downtown Lounge...There's a new restaurant/nightclub heating things up for the Financial District's after-work crowd. Cosmopolitan opened in September under the ownership of George Spirodopoulos and George Papakostadinous. (We thinks they're Greek.) The co-owners have turned what was once a cozy Irish pub into a sleek eatery with an international feel. The light fare has caught on with Financial District suits, and a DJ spins international tunes Thursday through Saturday nights to keep it fun. 33 Batterymarch St., Boston (617-695-9333).

Coffee Klatch...Everyone knows Boston tea parties can be a wild time. More than 1,000 people are expected to gather at the Old South Meeting House to commemorate the 230th anniversary of the world's most legendary tea-related event. In order to make this year's celebration the best yet, the brewing experts at Flavia Beverage Systems are giving away the Flavia SB100 home coffee/tea brewers in exchange for outdated coffee machines. Flavia makes a donation to the Boston Tea Party celebration for each pot exchanged (up to a total of $5,000). Bostonians can bring their tired old brewers to the Old South Meeting House Dec. 8-13, from 8 am to 1 pm, and get themselves a state-of-the-art coffee/tea/hot chocolate maker free of charge and support a historic celebration in the process. www.flavia.net/revolution.

Noodle Bug...Chinatown has a new addition: Noodle Alcove. Its speciality? You guessed it: noodles. Options range from dao-chay (knife-cut) to la-mein (pulled), and the average check is under $20. We hear the roast pork noodle soup and the pan-fried Peking ravioli are the way to go. 10 Tyler St., Boston (617-542-5857).

Sealed Vault...Sadly enough, our 2003 Boston's Best-Kept Secret winner in the Food & Drink category, Carmen Quagliata at the Vault, may have been too much of a secret. Co-owners Brian O'Neill and Quagliata served the Financial District hidden gem's last dish November 15. A spokesperson for the Vault says O'Neill is turning his full attention to his other local ventures, the Good Life and Centro, while Quagliata is "taking a step back and thinking through his options. I'm sure he's already getting calls [about future projects]."

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Live Acts...BeanTown Jazz Festival founder and Bob the Chef's Jazz Café owner Darryl Settles recently paired up with local saxophonist Paulo Danay and music producer Craig Eleazer to put years of music connections to good use. The trio's new booking company, BeanTown Sounds, specializes in matching local jazz, R&B and blues artists with corporate and private events. Twenty-five musicians are already on the roster, including heavy hitters Boston Horns, Herman Johnson, Jose Ramos, and Ashanti (not to be confused with the Murder Inc. label darling) & Umoja 9. (617-822-9576).

Brookline Burnout...Brookline's expansive stretch of funky restaurants and shops has had a run of bad luck. Looks like 13 is an unlucky number for Boston Daily Bread and Bombay Bistro on Beacon Street's 1300 block. Sub shop Quiznos is slated for the bakery's former digs, while the Bistro's successor is to be announced. Down the street at 1028 Beacon, Natural Frontier Market shut down following internal problems and a September skirmish with health inspectors. Perhaps these failed businesses should have followed the lead of arts and crafts shop the Pear Tree, which vacated its 1355 Beacon St. locale in July and moved to a smaller location around the corner.

Sweet Repeats...For some, the lure of a second-hand store is treasure-hunting for vintage finds. For others, it's all about sticking to a budget. Rewind Clothing and Gift Emporium, the latest addition to the eclectic SoWa neighborhood, offers a bit of both. Jim Leombruno and partner Brian Caesar opened their preowned and vintage clothing store in the former location of the Pine Street Inn's thrift store Sept. 15. The shop is filled with tables and racks of meticulously organized men's and women's clothing—from jeans and blazers to vintage coats—plus tchotchkes galore. Clothes average between $8 and $30, and that's exactly how the owners want it. "This isn't supposed to be the Garment District," says Leombruno. "It's more functional." 1736 Washington St., Boston (617-424-7677).

Collars Up...With the tagline "Well-bred clothing for the well-heeled," it makes sense that J. McLaughlin stores would be found only in posh areas like Madison Ave., Southampton, Greenwich, Nantucket and now Beacon Hill. The company set up shop on the corner of Charles and Chestnut streets in September. The sportswear outpost's flamboyant green, blue and purple walls are a vibrant addition to Charles Street, but the clientele is the classic type. Expect to rub elbows with Burberry-clad women while perusing the quilted riding coats, argyle cashmere sweaters and belts embroidered with images of dogs (purebred, naturally). 34 Charles St., Boston (617-228-4195).

Quiet T...There's a rumblin' beneath the city streets, and it ain't just the trains rolling by. Buskers across the city are up in arms about a new MBTA policy that was due to go into effect Dec. 8. Members of the Subway Artists Guild filed a complaint with the American Civil Liberties Union against the MBTA Subway Performers Program, the result of a post–Sept. 11 safety initiative. For the first time in what MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo describes as "a long time," T performers are required to pay $25 for an annual permit. The policy designates performance-appropriate locations and demands that buskers "be neat in appearance." Amplifiers, horns, drums and all electric instruments are now banned too. "It's not against the performers," says Pesaturo. "They're still allowed to be there."

THE HOST WITH THE LEAST

My guests know the true value of a night at the Holiday Inn

I rarely host houseguests. And if I do, it's generally one of my college friends like Whits or Neskey, who both fall under the category of "low maintenance." We go out, get drunk, and when we get back to my place they pass out on my couch. I'll usually give them a pillow and a blanket, but that's only to keep them comfortable enough that they don't attempt to crawl into bed with me during the night. It's like when you're camping and you tie your food up in a tree to keep bears away from your tent.

Given my decidedly limited background in the hospitality industry, I had reason to worry when Roommate Scott called one recent Saturday and informed me that there were two Japanese women at our door and they would be staying with us for several days. Apparently, they were friends of one of his friends. He hadn't expected them to show up yet, and he wouldn't be home for 45 minutes. I walked outside and sure enough, there were two Japanese women standing there. I may not be Martha Stewart, but I figured I could entertain until Scott got home.

We sat on the couch and made our introductions. One of the women, Yuko, spoke English, but the other, Rie, was fluent only in nodding and smiling. We began by talking about what they planned to do during their two days in Boston, which was a short discussion because they were interested in going to lots of cultural attractions and museums and I'm an ignorant slob.

After we talked about Boston museums that I know the names of (I recommended the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, which I'm told is great), I gave them a primer on Boston using my trusty laminated map. "This is the North End, where all the Italian restaurants are. This is Newbury Street, where everyone walks too slow. This is the Public Garden, where the Pilgrims protested the tea tax by burning witches during the Civil War." Lucky for them, I happen to know a lot about Boston history.

Eventually, though, I ran out of helpful tips about the city, and we were all reduced to staring intently at the map and wondering where the hell Scott was. Lacking any better ideas, I turned on the TV and began watching college football, which is what I'd planned on doing anyway. But now, instead of just being lazy, I was sharing my culture.

Yuko and Rie watched politely for a few minutes, but I could tell that the in-state rivalry between Miami and Florida State wasn't captivating them quite like a pink leather Hello Kitty cell phone cover. So I proposed taking a walk to Newbury Street, where we could people-watch, browse shops, and curse Scott's lineage for his disappearing all day while I convinced two foreigners that Americans are rude, clueless imbeciles. In case they didn't think that already.

After I took them to Banana Republic, which I learned is also very popular in Japan, Yuko and Rie jumped in a cab and fled to the Gardner Museum. Scott called soon thereafter asking where the Japanese girls were, to which I replied that they'd managed to shake me somewhere on the second floor of Banana Republic but I didn't think they'd get very far—the map I gave them ends on the edge of Brookline.

Eventually our Japanese visitors did return, no doubt despite their better judgment, and the next night they set about cooking a fantastic multicourse meal. They were easily the best guests we've ever had, which made me feel extra bad that Rie was excluded from the dinner conversation. So, reaching back to my days hanging out with Nobuo, my Japanese exchange-student friend from high school, I tried to think of a few Japanese words to toss into the ring. Unfortunately, all Nobuo ever taught me was obscenities, but I figured that was better than nothing. "Chin-chin omanko!" I said hopefully. Both women's heads snapped toward me and they put their hands over their faces while I wondered what, exactly, I'd said. Fortunately, they both started laughing. "She says that was very surprising to her," said Yuko. "She didn't understand anything anyone was saying, and then all of a sudden heard you say, 'pee-pee sex.'" I suppose that would be surprising to me, too, if I were having dinner in Japan and someone turned to me and declared "pee-pee sex!"

I COULD TELL THAT THE FOOTBALL RIVALRY BETWEEN MIAMI AND FLORIDA STATE WASN'T CAPTIVATING MY JAPANESE GUESTS.

You may be wondering where Rie and Yuko slept. The answer: Scott's bed. He slept on the couch. Hey, I gave him a pillow. Who says I'm not a good host? IB

JONATHAN TUCKER

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY TRACY AIGUIER

Up-and-coming actor Jonathan Tucker, 21, was born and raised in Boston (aside from a brief stint in Paris), the son of art historian/professor/curator Paul Hayes Tucker and marketing analyst Maggie Moss-Tucker. By third grade, Jonathan was starring in Boston Ballet's production of The Nutcracker. After attending the Park School in Brookline, he moved to California to pursue an acting career. (He recently graduated from the Thacher School in Ojai and has deferred admission to Columbia University.) His film credits include Barry Levinson's critically acclaimed Sleepers; the art house hit The Deep End, opposite Tilda Swinton; the romantic comedy Two if by Sea, with Denis Leary and Sandra Bullock; and Sofia Coppola's The Virgin Suicides. On television, he has appeared in The Practice, a role that immediately segued into a guest-starring spot on Steven Bochco's Philly. The past year has been Tucker's busiest to date, with roles in the remake of the horror classic The Texas Chainsaw Massacre, a film with Val Kilmer entitled Stateside that will be released next spring, and the upcoming Steven Soderbergh/George Clooney con man thriller Criminal. He lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, what was it like playing a Hobbit and filming The Lord of the Rings trilogy for all those months down in New Zealand?

Jonathan Tucker: I imagine it was as exciting as the movies, but I'm not in them.

JS: Just wanted to be sure you were paying attention. So you're 21, huh?

JT: I just turned 21, and my girlfriend bought me a Kegerator, so that even though I'm not in college, I can feel like it, with all that Sam Adams pumping through my system.

JS: What, pray tell, is a Kegerator?

JT: It's like a mini-refrigerator that keeps a keg cold.

JS: Ahhhh. Your parents must be so proud.

JT: Just trying to pay homage to the Irish Catholic Boston boy in me.

JS: What's your take on being a child star?

JT: I don't think anyone's ever described me that way, since that implies being a star. I was just fortunate enough to work as a teenager.

JS: So you never made it to the cover of Teen People or Tiger Beat*?*

JT: No, but both myself and my manager weren't trying to go in that direction.

JS: So what was the most annoying thing about being underage in Hollywood—not being able to do tequila shots with the crew?

JT: Being underage in Hollywood certainly doesn't negate the possibility of going out and having a few drinks, but it does maybe limit your ability to finesse the script supervisor or anyone on the set over the age of 35. Once you hit 21, pretty much all the women on the set are fair game. When you're under 21, they're a little skeptical.

JS: Your first public performance was in The Nutcracker*?*

JT: Yeah. I was in Boston Ballet for four or five years.

JS: How much grief did you get for that?

JT: My class knew how cool it was. But all the grades above? Not so understanding. When my picture was on the front page of the Living/Arts section of the Globe, the next day was a tough one at school.

JS: Didn't you get incredibly sick of the music? By the end of the Christmas season, I want to slap Tchaikovsky for writing it.

JT: It does get to be a bit like a dentist's drill, and I can tell you every single beat of that score, but I wouldn't want to.

JS: Do you still dance?

JT: No.

JS: Which one of the Three Stooges would you most like to play?

JT: Is Moe the big guy?

JS: No, that's Curly. Moe was the grouchy one who was always in charge.

JT: That's the one.

JS: You've starred opposite Dustin Hoffman and Al Pacino. Who overacts more?

JT: To be honest with you, when I bring my truth to that set, they both kinda calm down and shut up and listen to what I have to say. I let 'em know what's goin' on, and of course, both of them have been quoted a few times saying they've learned a lot from "the Tuck." I'm not gonna refute that.

JS: So you're a wiseass. What are the odds that with that innocent face you'll ever play a drug kingpin?

JT: Seriously high. I love that kind of stuff. I'm drawn to the dark and twisted.

JS: It shows in the fact that you've been in some seriously creepy movies. What's the grossest thing that happens in the remake of The Texas Chainsaw Massacre*?*

JT: Some of the death scenes are pretty fantastic. In fact, they're so exciting that some of the people in the audience stood up to applaud the shots.

JS: On the subject of actors you've worked with: Is Tilda Swinton part alien, part feline or what?

JT: Part feline, quite possibly. It's like she's got this truth machine in her that doesn't allow her to do anything but breathe the moment. You can't believe you're working with such a talented actor. She's incredible.

JS: Thing you'd most like to read about yourself in a tabloid?

JT: Seen leaving a nightclub with 15 underage women in a stretch Humvee, drinking rye whiskey. Or even better, that Rene Russo was trying to pick me up.

JS: Who do you get mistaken for, because you're at the point in your career when people must stop you and try to place you?

JT: What I get is guys who are 45 saying, "Didn't we go to high school together?" I'm like, "No, no, no. You're 100 years older than me." Or they're like, "I know you from somewhere," and I'll say, "I was great on Celebrity Mole," or "Maybe you saw me on Fear Factor?"

JS: Three things Boston has that L.A. doesn't?

JT: Deep-rooted character. A true sense of history. And the best little dive bars in the world.

JS: How about one thing you like better about L.A.?

JT: It's got more cheap ethnic restaurants that are really good. There are all these little shopping centers and strip malls where you'd never think to eat, and they have the most spectacular Indian, Cuban, Japanese or Middle Eastern food. You can eat well for $5 a day.

JS: Ever secretly rehearse an Oscar acceptance speech?

JT: No, but I've certainly rehearsed other things, like my Nobel Prize acceptance speech.

JS: On the flipside of Oscar-worthy, there's Two if by Sea. Did anyone actually see that?

JT: Well, I don't think it turned out as successfully as Denis Leary would have liked, and it certainly wasn't his fault.

JS: So it was all Sandra Bullock's fault?

JT: No. She became immensely famous right when that movie came out. She was on the cover of every magazine on the newsstands. You can't blame anyone.

JS: You deferred admission at Columbia. Will you ever go?

JT: Yes, definitely, at some point. The long academic history in my family will propel me to get there, but right now, I don't want to close the door I've been trying to get my foot through for the past 10 years.

JS: So maybe you'll be the oldest living undergraduate. In all seriousness, what's the likelihood that you'll go back once you've been anointed the new It Boy on the cover of Vanity Fair and you're doing back-to-back movies?

JT: Well, college is flexible. People do it. I know that I could take off, say, four months to do a movie, or get a few acting jobs in the can and then concentrate on school. With the education I've already been fortunate enough to have, and the importance of education in my family, it can't be any other way.

JS: What is your dream role?

JT: I'd love to play a back-country, dope-smoking chess master, some guy who's an idiot savant at chess but very strange otherwise.

JS: Fantasy love-scene partner?

JT: Does it have to be an actress?

JS: No, why?

JT: Well, there's this Harvard professor I've seen on Charlie Rose a few times. Helen Goggin, I think it is. She's the hottest thing I've ever seen. I think Cokie Roberts is pretty hot too. I'm a news junkie.

JS: So you've got a thing for the news ladies?

JT: Well, don't try to tell me Joyce Kulhawik isn't smokin'. You'd be lying.

JS: Last question: What do you want to have accomplished by the time you turn 30?

JT: I'd like to be in a position to greenlight any project I wanted to. And be anchoring CNN Headline News. That would be pretty fantastic. IB

MAKING A difference

EVEN IN A TOUGH ECONOMY, CREATIVE NONPROFITS ARE STAYING THE COURSE

Don't be surprised if requests for donations sound especially urgent this season.

That's because for many Boston nonprofits, this is not an easy time. The local economy has seen some rough years (which can lead to leaner individual donations). There have been cuts in state spending (which affect nonprofits that get government funding). And in general, the endowment investments that fund many foundations have not performed as well in the last few years as they did in the late 1990s (which means smaller pools of money are available to make grants). Put all three factors together, and it's a tough combination.

"It's definitely an economically challenging time," explains Jeff Bellows, vice president, marketing communications and public relations at the United Way of Massachusetts Bay. According to Bellows, spending by the state of Massachusetts on health and human services has been reduced by nearly $2 billion from fiscal year 2001 to fiscal year 2004. Meanwhile, he says, the number of Americans donating to health and human services charities has hit its lowest level in 40 years.

"Those nonprofits that deal with health and human services have been hit very hard," observes Terry Saunders Lane, vice president for program at the Boston Foundation, a philanthropic foundation that supports Greater Boston nonprofits.

Arts-related organizations, too, have faced particular challenges. Many local arts nonprofits are small, with annual budgets under $500,000, and such smaller organizations, Lane says, are "really struggling." Another area of concern: small, neighborhood-based nonprofit organizations that serve low-income families and newcomers.

Lane points out, however, that she's seeing some creative responses to the economic challenges local nonprofits face. Those responses can include sharing back-office resources such as payroll with other nonprofits, forming strategic partnerships, merging, or strengthening fund-raising efforts. Because running a nonprofit is "really, really hard" right now, that's "forcing a lot more collaboration," observes Andrew Wolk, president and CEO of the Boston-based Root Cause Institute, which consults with nonprofits on developing entrepreneurial leadership. Wolk, too, says he's seeing mergers and alliances—as well as some nonprofits just closing.

Despite those difficulties, lots of nonprofits continue to do useful, important work all over the city. Some are well-known, but many, particularly the smaller ones, are not. Here are just a few of their stories.

Jumpstart pairs college students with preschoolers who need special attention.

FROM HARVARD BUSINESS SCHOOL TO PRESCHOOLS

Despite the generally challenging environment facing nonprofits, CEO Rob Waldron has big plans for Jumpstart, an early-literacy program headquartered in Boston. Jumpstart operates in 44 communities around the country; its model involves pairing a college student with a 3- to 5-year-old preschooler who is behind in the skills needed for school. According to Waldron, the 10 to 15 hours of extra attention and learning activities each week that Jumpstart provides helps children increase their academic skills at a 20 percent greater rate than children in the same preschool who do not participate in Jumpstart.

Waldron says research shows that investments in early childhood education yield a high economic return for society. In fact, he claims, some governors look at the number of students behind in literacy in elementary school to help predict the prison population in future years. Investing in early childhood education is, for society, "one of the single best investments if you want to produce results and save money," he says.

Waldron, a Harvard Business School graduate who ran one of the nation's largest for-profit tutoring companies before joining Jumpstart, describes his organization as one of the few AmeriCorps-funded programs to grow over the past fiscal year. He has ambitious goals. Currently, more than 1,600 college students around the country are involved with Jumpstart; Waldron hopes eventually to increase that number to between 10,000 and 20,000 students. That way, Waldron believes, Jumpstart could have a significant effect on teacher-student ratios in federally funded Head Start preschool programs, which is where most Jumpstart activities take place. Waldron also says his organization is thinking about expanding its programs in Boston considerably.

Key to those growth plans is a diversified funding stream. In addition to AmeriCorps government funding, Waldron says Jumpstart is funded by a combination of individual donations and support from foundations and corporations. Corporate supporters include some big names. For example, until the end of the year, the Starbucks Foundation will make a $5 donation to Jumpstart every time a customer uses a Starbucks Card Duetto Visa for the first time.

Waldron notes that the Jumpstart program has had an unanticipated effect: This year, 30 percent of the graduating college seniors who worked as mentors in Jumpstart applied to be Head Start or early-education teachers, even though two-thirds of them had not previously intended to go into teaching. (617-542-5867). www.jstart.org.

DOING MORE WITH LESS

Like so many others, Madeleine Steczynski faces a conundrum. Zumix, the East Boston–based nonprofit for which she serves as executive director, has seen its funding decline. Some funders, particularly those that are government organizations, are offering smaller grants, as their own budgets have shrunk. But at the same time, she sees increasing demand for Zumix's programs—instruction for low-income youth in songwriting, instrumental music, music production and performance. She's seen other agencies, particularly those that once received a lot of government funding, shut down; a housing project near Zumix, she says, just closed its youth center.

So Steczynski is trying to figure out how to do more with less. Formerly a manager in an architecture firm, she co-founded Zumix in the early 1990s with Bob Grove, a professional musician, out of concern over high rates of violence among urban youth at that time. In the current funding climate, Zumix has made a conscious decision to try to serve more youth, to "let them be part of a place that is caring and safe." Steczynski and her three full-time staff members have rejiggered responsibilities, so they can devote more staff to offering programs. "Finances are tight," she says. On the positive side, she notes the organization is looking at better uses of partnerships, working with an area middle school and also with interns from schools such as Berklee College of Music. However, "there are definitely many more kids to serve than we are able to serve," she says. "We still have long waiting lists for all of our programs." (617-568-9777). www.zumix.org.

CREATING SHELTER—AND AN URBAN FARM

Like Stecyzynski, Yvonne Miller-Booker started a nonprofit because of her concern about the youth violence that plagued Boston in the late 1980s and early 1990s. Miller-Booker, who worked for a state legislator at the time, remembers going to meeting after meeting where people talked about the problem. At some point, she'd had it with talking about the city's problems and wanted to start thinking about solutions.

Miller-Booker's solution to urban problems was to focus on particularly vulnerable families: homeless women with young children. Re-Vision House, the Dorchester-based nonprofit she and a group of other women launched in 1989 and 1990, currently provides shelter to 22 women and up to 30 children. While staying at the shelter, residents are required to work 20 hours a week or go to school as well as attend mandatory workshops on topics such as budgeting and parenting. "Sometimes they get upset with me because everything is mandatory," Miller-Booker says.

Over the years, Miller-Booker has expanded Re-Vision House—it now occupies two triple-decker buildings. Remarkably, she has also added a small farm—about an acre of working gardens, divided over three locations. Meanwhile, the back porches of one of the triple-deckers have been converted for a pilot program in aquaculture and hydroponic agriculture. None of this was easy to set up. Staff member Judy Lieberman describes the remediation process that had to take place before the largest farming area, formerly a vacant lot, could be ready for agricultural use. The soil had to be tested, contaminated soil (which had low levels of lead) removed and new, clean soil brought in. But now Re-Vision Urban Farm produces flowers and vegetables—including basil and a lettuce mix that is sold to several area restaurants—and tilapia (a type of fish).

And, importantly, the farm and aquaculture projects provide internship opportunities for Re-Vision House residents. As interns, residents get a chance to earn some money and fulfill their work requirement while learning a variety of skills, such as dealing with retail customers at a farmer's market. Although Miller-Booker doesn't expect the women who stay at the house to become farmers, she notes that they are acquiring a knowledge of container gardening, which can provide supplemental nutrition for their families. Plus, Miller-Booker, who grew up on a Pennsylvania farm, thinks working on the project brings some intangible benefits as well. "Working with the soil is so therapeutic," she says. "You'd be amazed at the changes in the attitudes of the women."

Re-Vision House's biggest challenge at the moment? According to Miller-Booker, it's finding permanent housing for residents. Because Section 8 rental housing subsidies in Massachusetts are currently frozen, residents are staying longer in the house—which means that fewer families can be served. "It's very difficult to find housing for these women," says Miller-Booker, who adds that none of the Re-Vision House residents can afford market-rate rents in Boston.

On the whole, though, Miller-Booker says her organization, which receives a mix of federal, foundation and private funding, has been "very blessed." And a block that included drug dealers and vacant lots when she started now houses both the small farm and the shelter for women. "All the children here call me Nana," even those who have moved on from Re-Vision House, says Miller-Booker, who is 62. "So I'm Nana to about 600 children." (617-825-8642). www.re-visionhouse.com.

GROWING THE ECONOMY—THROUGH ARTS

At the Arts, Cultural & Trade Roxbury Consortium (ACT Roxbury), Candelaria Silva is also thinking about growth—from a different perspective. ACT Roxbury, which is a program of Madison Park Development Corp., a nonprofit community development corporation, aims to encourage economic growth in Roxbury by promoting arts and cultural events. "Art and culture do more to revitalize a community than any businesses do," says Silva, ACT Roxbury's director.

COMING THROUGH IN THE CLUTCH

New England's pro sports teams score with local charities

BY EZRA DYER

Top: The Boston Bruins Foundation made a $25,000 donation to SCORE Boston, a nonprofit that teaches inner-city youth to play hockey. Center: Adam Vinatieri's jersey brought in $1,300 for charity. Bottom: Nomar Garciaparra with a Jimmy Fund kid.

Sometimes it's easy to be cynical about professional sports, a business where multimillionaire team owners pay multimillionaire athletes to hit a small leather ball with a wooden club or throw an inflated sphere through a metal ring. Perhaps that's one reason why all of Boston's professional sports teams—and many individual players—run charitable organizations that funnel some of that cash flow back to worthy causes. The Dana-Farber Cancer Institute's Jimmy Fund, for instance, has been synonymous with the Red Sox for the past 50 years, but all the local pro franchises are involved in efforts to give something back to the community.

New ownership is part of the reason for the upturn in goodwill. When John Henry, Tom Werner and company bought the Red Sox last year, they set up the Red Sox Foundation, which funds children's charities. Henry and the other Sox owners kicked in $17 million last year. The Sox also hosted charity-themed days throughout the season, like the Red Sox Wives' Picnic in the Park and the Sept. 11 blood drive. Besides the new charity work at Fenway, the Sox have also become sponsors of the Pan-Mass Challenge pledge bike ride, which is the biggest athletic benefit in the country and raised $16.2 million for the Jimmy Fund this year.

The Celtics are another venerable Boston franchise that recently came under new ownership, and like Henry, Celtics CEO Wyc Grousbeck and his partners have created new charitable avenues for the team. October marked the inaugural Opening Night Celebration, a party for the Boston Celtics Charitable Foundation that raised more than $750,000 for children's charities. The Celtics are also heavily involved at the individual level, with Paul Pierce, Eric Williams, Vin Baker and Walter McCarty all running their own foundations. Budding R&B singer McCarty is donating a portion of proceeds from his new album, Moment for Love, to his I Love Music Foundation, which supports music-related causes for youth.

The Celtics' FleetCenter comrades, the Bruins, also began new community work this season with the launch of the Boston Bruins Foundation. The Bruins Foundation, like the Celtics and Red Sox public-service arms, benefits children's charities. The foundation runs charity auctions and raffles (the next auction will be held March 7, 2004), schedules player hospital visits, donates game tickets and organizes regular benefit events. Two of this season's early successes were "Hockey 101 for Women," where 184 women received a behind-the-scenes primer on hockey—including a tour of the locker room—and a wine-tasting event at Morton's where several hard-nosed Bruins players like Martin Lapointe (who estimates that he owns between 1,300 and 1,400 bottles of wine) revealed they also have a nose for nice vino.

In Foxboro, the Patriots and New England Revolution both contribute to the New England Patriots Charitable Foundation, which has made donations to thousands of nonprofits since its inception in 1994, when Robert Kraft purchased the team. The Patriots Foundation raises money through major annual events like a golf tournament and a preseason party, but the Pats also cater to smaller spenders with a continuous online auction of memorabilia—recently Chris Calloway's game-worn cleats went for $55, and an autographed Adam Vinatieri jersey brought in more than $1,300—and paid scoreboard messages. The latter offer a chance to give someone a unique birthday present—or marriage proposal—for a $75 donation. "We could charge $1,000 per message, and we'd still be turning people away," says Patriots corporate affairs spokesman Will McDonough. "But the paperwork that goes into any donation over $75 isn't worth the money, and we want to keep it cheap as a service to the community."

So the next time you're bemoaning scarce, expensive tickets or outrageously priced concessions, remember your rabid devotion to the local teams in some small way helps the less fortunate. And enjoy the game.

Silva has growth statistics to report: Roxbury Open Studios, which is organized by ACT Roxbury and just completed its fifth year, has increased from roughly 60 participating artists in its first year to 150 this past year. And the consortium's annual Roxbury Film Festival, which showcases films written, produced or directed by filmmakers of color, started as a one-and-a-half day event and has grown to five days in length. Other ACT Roxbury programs include a series of workshops for artists (open to any artist, not just Roxbury residents) on topics like publicity and Web design. The organization also helps run "Discover! Roxbury" historical and cultural tours (www.discoverroxbury.org) in conjunction with a Lexington-based group called the Bridges Program.

Silva, too, has had to cope with a difficult funding environment: She says the Massachusetts Cultural Council was a big financial supporter until its budget was cut. (The MCC, a state agency that funds programs in the arts, sciences and humanities, had its state funding cut 62 percent for fiscal 2003, according to MCC communications director John Michael Kennedy.)

GRASSROOTS PHILANTHROPY

It would be nice to have millions to give away to worthy causes, yet most of us don't. But what if you could be a philanthropist for just a dollar a day?

That's the intriguing premise behind the Daily Muses Fund. In 2001, a small group of professional women in the Boston area formed the Daily Muses as a "giving circle"—a group where members commit to donate $365 each per year through the group, pooling their donations for greater impact. The group currently consists of 10 women ranging in age from their 20s to their 40s. "We're just working gals who really are trying to make a difference in our communities," says Rebekah Kaufman, a founding member.

The group gives grants to two nonprofits per year and focuses on organizations that serve women and children in the area. In 2002, the group gave about $2,000, according to Kaufman. And members are encouraged to donate not just their money but also their time and expertise. For example, Kaufman, a marketing manager, and Julie Duncan, a Daily Muse member who is a graphic designer, created publicity and fund-raising materials for one of the nonprofits to which the group gave a grant. "You want to contribute what your skills are," explains Kaufman. And that kind of contribution can be worth a lot; Kaufman estimates that the value of the work on the publicity and fund-raising materials was greater than the Daily Muses' grant.

Curious about the giving circle phenomenon? You can find more information—and send for a free Giving Circle Starter Kit—at www.givingnetwork.org/circpage.html. Some giving circles involve larger amounts of money per year than the Daily Muses Fund. But Kaufman sees the Daily Muses as a sort of training ground for aspiring philanthropists. Donating $365 a year is "a lot of money," she says. "But it's doable and it's comfortable." dailymusesfund@yahoo.com.

AND THE WINNERS ARE...

Most of the time, nonprofit organizations apply for grants. But four times a year, the grantmakers at the Boston Foundation give what it calls an "Out of the Blue" grant—an unrestricted $75,000 grant that no organization can apply for. "We basically do this to recognize outstanding work by organizations," says Terry Saunders Lane, vice president for program at the Boston Foundation, a philanthropic community foundation for Greater Boston.

What are some of the Boston Foundation's picks? Here are the organizations that have received an Out of the Blue grant in the past 12 months:

But ACT Roxbury, whose other funding sources include foundations, is trying to further diversify its financial base; it has started a membership program for individuals and businesses and is working to increase giving by individual donors. And the organization has growth plans: It has acquired Hibernian Hall in Roxbury's Dudley Square, a long-unused building that was slated to be demolished. By the end of 2004, ACT Roxbury hopes to renovate the building, which Silva describes as the only one of five former Irish dance halls in Dudley Square that has its ballroom still intact. The aim? To give the building new life—as the Roxbury Center for Arts, Culture & Trade.

Silva sees part of ACT Roxbury's mission as changing people's perception of Roxbury, through consistent cultural programming, to let people know that Roxbury is "more than they see on the nightly news." Those news stories, she says, tend to emphasize the negative. (617-541-3900 ext. 222). www.actroxbury.org.

CHANGING PERCEPTIONS

At another Boston nonprofit, the Dorchester-based Boston Learning Center, executive director Ayéle Shakur is also working on changing perceptions. But in Shakur's case, the attitudes she hopes to change are those of teenagers in the Boston public schools. Shakur, who graduated from the Harvard Graduate School of Education and worked as a teacher in Compton, Calif., and later in Boston, saw a trend where "students just did not think it was cool to be smart."

With a program called the BIFF Paradigm Project, Shakur and her husband, Gary Bracey, hope to change youths' negative perceptions of school and education. (BIFF stands for Building Inspiration to Fight Failure.) The BIFF project, which was piloted in a Boston charter school in 1999, has expanded to six schools. BIFF has foundation funding, Shakur says, while the Boston Learning Center's other tutoring programs are self-supporting, through tuition fees.

What is the BIFF program? It's an after-school motivational and learning program aimed at bright and capable students who are underachieving, Shakur explains. Many of the students in BIFF tend to be social leaders in their schools, she says, and often their social leadership and academic failure are related. The program uses the story of a fictional wealthy entrepreneur named Biff Jones, an underachieving student who turned his school performance around—and realized later that the same habits that helped him become a successful student also helped him succeed as an entrepreneur. So, the story goes, Biff designed the program to encourage young people to envision a future where they could run their own businesses, where "you're the employer, not the employee."

"It's really about changing kids' paradigm" about what it means to be smart, says Shakur. The program aims to teach kids study skills and also provide them with role models other than rap stars and drug dealers. "We're really trying to show them there's another path," Shakur says. The program is generally co-taught by a teacher and an entrepreneur, she says. One highlight: A limo comes to school at the end of the term to take students on the BIFF honor roll out for ice cream or pizza.

Shakur reports some impressive results. When the first class of students who took BIFF graduated from high school, she says, 100 percent got into their first-choice college. And she says 80 percent of the students who go through the program have averaged an increase of 10 to 33 points in their combined grades in English, math, science and history. What the program aims to do, Shakur says, is teach students that they face two paths—one leading to failure and the other to prosperity. "They choose," she says. (617-265-7170). iB

THERE'S GOOD NEWS FOR THOSE WITH FULL HEARTS AND EMPTY WALLETS THIS HOLIDAY SEASON. YOU CAN STILL HELP THE NEEDY BY DONATING OLD OR UNUSED ITEMS—FROM CARS TO CLOTHES TO COMPUTERS AND MORE—TO A HOST OF CHARITABLE CAUSES.

BY JULIE SURATT ILLUSTRATED BY SCOTT MAGOON

If you've got chestnuts roasting on an open fire, and Jack Frost is nipping at your nose, then chances are, local and national charities—anyone to whom you've ever contributed even a $2 check in years past—are bombarding you with pleas for money. 'Tis the season…for goodwill and emptying thy pockets.

But if you're feeling a bit strapped for cash this year, why not consider making a material donation? We're not talking just about clothing. Charitable organizations will take everything from outdated cell phones or computers to formal wear, used bikes or cars—even the untouched platters of leftover food from your company's holiday party. Below is a list of places that will gladly put your items to good use. Most are local, since we're all more likely to give if we can drop something off or have it picked up. (Convenience is a "huge factor in giving," confirms Lisa Rowan-Gillis of the Home for Little Wanderers, which is why the organization, like others listed here, has convenient drop-off hours. Many have accessible drop boxes and some even do curbside pickup.) What's more, if you donate by Dec. 31, you might be able to deduct the fair market value of the gift from your taxes—just ask the organization if your contribution is tax-deductible, and be sure to get a receipt. Let the giving begin.

BANQUET FOOD

Both the Greater Boston Food Bank and the Boston Rescue Mission have perishable-food rescue programs and will pick up prepared food from locations within a reasonable driving distance from Boston. For health reasons, neither organization can accept food that has been on the table. The GBFB donates the food to one of its 750 affiliated pantries, soup kitchens and homeless shelters in the Boston area. The Boston Rescue Mission offers the food to its residents and homeless guests.

BICYCLES

In 1984, while the U.S. government was sending military aid to Nicaragua to sponsor anti-Sandinista guerrillas, Bikes Not Bombs responded by sending a different type of aid to Nicaragua: used bicycles. The program now exports 1,000 bikes a year to its affiliate bike shops and businesses in four Central American countries and has recently expanded its program to Ghana. In the Boston area, BNB sponsors an Earn-a-Bike program for 12- to 18-year-olds who take classes on bike safety and the fundamentals of bike mechanics. BNB can't use women's 10-speed-style bikes (partly because the frames aren't as sturdy for cycling on unpaved roads), but other women's frames are fine if they're hybrids, mountain bikes or three-speeds. There's a $5 suggested donation per bicycle for processing, and BNB does not have a pick-up service. Call ahead because BNB's storage lots fill up, and they may not be able to accept your bike. 59 Amory St., #103, Boston. 617-442-0004. www.bikesnotbombs.org.

CARS

Several organizations resell donated vehicles—including cars, SUVs, motor homes, boats and even Jet Skis—at auction for profit. Many even accept vehicles that don't run; others require the vehicle be in working condition. All will tow the car for you as long as you have keys for the vehicle and a title printed in your name (and the car is free of any liens). Most organizations sell the cars at auction, and proceeds benefit the group's programs.

CELL PHONES

- Staples takes cell phones, personal digital assistants and pagers (with their batteries and chargers) and refurbishes them to sell at affordable prices to people living in developing countries (usually Latin America or the Caribbean)—in many cases offering a family its first modern communication system. A portion of the proceeds from the sale benefits the Sierra Club, which uses the funds for environmental education and conservation programs. Drop boxes are located at all Staples locations. www.staples.com.
- Verizon Wireless sponsors the HopeLine wireless phone recycling program. The company works with a vendor who either refurbishes or recycles phones of any carrier, make or model. Verizon donates some of the refurbished phones (as well as calling time) to victims of domestic violence. Others are sold by the vendor, and a portion of the proceeds goes to domestic violence shelters. Drop off phones at all Verizon Wireless stores. www.verizonwireless.com.

- The Wireless Foundation's Donate a Phone program collects and resells used wireless phones (as an economical alternative to a new phone) to raise funds for a variety of charities. Some donated phones are refurbished to serve as lifelines for domestic violence victims. Drop off phones at Franklin Covey and Wireless Zone stores in Boston and Cambridge. www.wirelessfoundation.org.

CLOTHING

Most shelters accept a wide range of clothing and accessories. Wish lists include belts, backpacks, baseball caps, umbrellas, suitcases and linens. Warm clothing (including coats, hats, gloves and boots) and large sizes are especially in demand. Most of the organizations listed below also accept unused toiletries, including soap, deodorant, shampoo and toothbrushes. If you travel often and stay at hotels, remember that you can donate the sample-size toiletries that often collect in the bathroom at home.

- Big Brother Big Sister Foundation. Desired items: clothing for men, women and children. Clothing is sold in bulk to secondhand stores to raise money to support the mentoring programs of Big Brothers Big Sisters. Drop box at Stop & Shop, 60 Everett St., Allston. INMAN'S INNER BEAUTY

Inside the shops and restaurants of this Portuguese-speaking community, there's an exotic world waiting to be explored.

BY MICHAEL FREIDSON

PHOTOGRAPHED BY LISA DRAGANI

Top row: The Faialense Sports Club is a neighborhood center of activity.

The Portuguese-speaking community of Inman Square is hidden in the most existential sense of the word—even when you're there, you don't know it's there. Lining Cambridge Street, and including the area north of that street and east of Prospect Street (and lately, spilling over into Somerville), the neighborhood is nondescript: working-class, few visible tourists, hardly any Portuguese or Brazilian flags fluttering outside. Some sidewalk renovation work means construction everywhere. Exhaust from MBTA buses dissipates in the air. Pug-faced old men stand against gray, decades-old storefronts. In many ways, it's the urban version of Anytown, USA.

While it's hardly a tourist destination, there are regular visitors who make this neighborhood part of their Boston itinerary. Walk inside a restaurant or store and you'll see why: Friendly natives speak in an exotic tongue, carving hocks of meat and downing purple potions imported from the Amazon. Portuguese and Brazilians sit side-by-side, talking—that is, when they're not visiting Saint Anthon Church or feasting at one another's restaurants. Inside: ba chanalia and warmth. Outside: boring milieu. It explai why this area doesn't have the notoriety of more conce trated neighborhoods like Chinatown or the North En And with few signs overtly touting ethnicity, it's sometim hard to tell a Portuguese restaurant from a common din "Portuguese people are not the type to promote ther selves," says Maria Cerqueira, who, with her husband, Jo runs three area restaurants. "We're very down-to-earth a humble—unless we have a few glasses of wine."

Vinho verde, a fruity, naturally sparkling beverage, just one reason to visit a neighborhood filled with hea food (like traditional fish stew), a growing nightlife (wi a few old-school hangouts) and kindly natives happy give newcomers some attention.

There are about 200,000 Brazilians, Portuguese a Cape Verdeans in the Greater Boston area, and Ca bridge is their "hub," according to the Massachusetts A ance of Portuguese Speakers, a group that helps new immigrants settle in. Portuguese immigrants headed to Cambridge in the 1950s, escaping a dictatorship and a ad economy. They continued to come until the economy back home improved during the past decade. Now hey've been joined in the neighborhood by Brazilians nd Cape Verdeans fleeing their own troubled lands.

It's a solid community that shares a language yet remains iverse. "You don't end up with a Chinatown or Little Italy feeling] because this community was never made that vay," says Cambridge mayor Michael Sullivan, who's been ating in the area all his life. "Inman Square was originally rish, then Italian, then Portuguese and now Brazilian."

The latter two ethnicities have made the 'hood their wn. In a few short blocks, you'll find Portuguese and razilian travel agencies; grocery stores featuring quince am and jars of mackerel in hot sauce; bakeries; hair sa-ons; video and CD shops; bars; clubs; clothing huts and public library where you can read works by contempo-ary Brazilian novelist Paulo Coelho (or by Danielle teel) in Portuguese.

It's a bounty—and a little overwhelming for a visitor. t's easy to see why, when lucky outsiders first discover the ommunity, they head straight for the restaurants. The rea hosts more than 15 eateries serving either Por-uguese or Brazilian cuisine, and these offer a tasty intro-uction to the cultures.

Though the two cuisines are similar, there are important ifferences. Since Portugal is mainly coastal, many dishes re seafood-based. Brazilian dishes, with their origins in cat-e country, offer more meat and sausage—with Portuguese pices, but also palm oil and coconut flavoring, ingredients ontributed by the African slaves who populated Brazil dur-ng the Portuguese colonization in the 1800s.

The most popular Portuguese restaurant among visitors o the neighborhood is Atasca, if only because there are wo locations (50 Hampshire St. and 279A Broadway). oe and Maria Cerqueira own both plus a café, O'Can-nho (1128 Cambridge St.). At Atasca, you'll find earty seafood dishes, like carangejos moles à lgarvia—soft-shell crabs sauteed with almonds, white ine and garlic—and arroz de marisco à Valenciana, a itchen-sink special that includes lobster, shrimp, mus-els, clams, squid, pork, linguiça and chicken cooked ith saffron rice. A meal there averages $27. The café, more affordable option, offers lighter fare like ham ndwiches ($4.95), but also serves classics, including fe com ovo, steak with a fried egg on top ($10.95).

Born in Portugal, the Cerqueiras met in Boston in 980, when he was a waiter and she worked at Blue ross Blue Shield. Three years later, they married at aint Anthony's; 10 years later, they opened the roadway Atasca, which they designed to look like ome, with warm lighting, green walls and azulejos, hite tiles painted with blue scenes of farmers and fish.

Now, the duo are fixtures in the community, shaking ands with everyone from the local architect to the ailman. "The neighborhood is so different now," says laria Cerqueira, who moved here at age 4. "Growing p on [Cambridge's] Tremont Street was very tough. Ve spoke Portuguese in the house but not outside. It as very racial; some other kids would make fun. We idn't have all these Portuguese vendors."

"It was a different world back then. The attitude to-ard immigrants has changed," agrees David Castan-eira, owner of the neighboring Sunset Café (851–857 Cambridge St.). He bought the long-running restau-ant/bar from his father in 1988, and now the place is nown for live lado music on Friday and Saturday ights—usually, a guitarist and two viola players strum ld-world tunes that sound like the perfect title-credits usic to a bouncy foreign romance. The dreamy at-mosphere goes well with impress-your-date specialties like the Sunset cod ($16.95), a barbecued-fish and potato dish that's as filling as a steak. (Try it with a glass of vinho verde.) "There are a few new restaurants these days, and I hope we can all attract a younger audience," says Castanheira. "My bar is full of regulars. It's a neighborhood place, but we're always trying to attract new customers."

Sunset, like Portugalia (723 Cambridge St.) and Casa Portugal (1200 Cambridge St.), hearkens back to an older era. And the newer, Brazilian restaurants fit right in. One of the finest is Muqueca (1093 Cambridge St.), a small, homey, mostly undecorated café named after one of its dishes, a light fish stew cooked in a clay pot (with cilantro, tomato, onions and annatto, a natural muddy coloring) and served piping hot over rice ($9.95). Owners Antonio and Fafa Gomes import red snapper and hearts of palm from Brazil, as well as exotic juices made from the cashew fruit and açai (pronounced "aah-sigh-ee"), a purple berry from the Amazon that's believed to be full of vitamins and anti-oxidants. It's also rumored to boost your sex drive, which may explain why the thong is so popular in Brazil.

"People usually come here, see what other people are eating, start chatting," says Gomes, who lives in the back. "They're curious about these dishes."

Across the street, at the Brazilian Midwest Grill (1124 Cambridge St.), speeding waiters crisscross the dining room, carrying eight pounds of meat on a sword—they slice off an order at the diner's table before rushing back to the grill. "It's always hot," says co-owner Gilmar Pinto of the churrasco rodizio, or rotating barbecue ($16.95 before 4 pm; $21.96 after), which includes pork loin, chicken, chicken hearts, sirloin, lamb and two types of sausage. "People start to laugh because it looks like too much. They make fun of each other, especially the first time. Some people eat for two hours. And sometimes they say they're not going to eat for three days."

Casal Bakery sells coconut cake and other treats.

Pinto, born in Brazil, opened the restaurant in 1993 and says his Portuguese neighbors have always been friendly. "We speak the same language. It's like we're brothers."

"The culture is very similar," says Joe Cerqueira. "It's not a contest."

Those warm-and-fuzzy feelings were best illustrated six months ago, when the Portuguese owner of the Casal Bakery (1075 Cambridge St.) sold his business to Brazilian Daniel Lopes. The 28-year-old institution is where many locals buy their beloved Portuguese bread, a sugary, thick round loaf so firm it's often served with soup—as the bowl. "In the beginning, some customers left because of the owner change," says Lopes, who hardly changed the recipes. "But many came back to buy the bread when they found out it's similar to what it was before."

It's after dinner that you notice the biggest difference between the two cultures: The Brazilians party harder. At Portugalia's bar, which caters to the Portuguese, old-timers chat about the old days. Portuguese folks also hang at the Faialense Sports Club (1121 Cambridge St.), a members-only joint that's representative of the patrons' idea of a good time: For $30 a year, you can come in, drink beer and watch soccer games on the big-screen TV in a brightly lit room. "Anyone can join," says the club's president, though on a recent visit it was filled solely with Portuguese-speaking men over 50. If you really want to study the community—or learn a few Portuguese swear words—watch a game with these guys.

But if you want to dance, you can walk a few blocks to Somerville's Union Square, where the Toast Lounge (70 Union Square) represents the community's expansion beyond the Cambridge border. The first thing you'll see: a Brazilian flag hanging outside the club. The second thing you'll see: attractive, young Brazilian men and women in their mid-20s, wearing tight jeans, tank tops and sunglasses, forgetting they ever left Rio.

Nights like that could catch on with a diverse crowd—at Toast's opening night in October, people of all ethnic backgrounds joined the Brazilians on the dance floor. But so far, only a few businesses in the Portuguese-speaking community consistently attract patrons from beyond the neighborhood. Neither Inman nor Union Square has its own T stop. O'Cantinho and the Midwest Grill are close to other Inman Square businesses—big draws like the S&S Deli, Christina's Homemade Ice Cream and the East Coast Grill—and benefit from the location. But move east, down Cambridge Street, and you'll find some places that are still mostly locals-only. "It's tough being out here," says Sunset's Castanheira. "We've tried every coupon deal you can think of. No one wants to walk down."

If you do explore the 'hood, it's worth the effort. This visitor had moqueca at Muqueca; struck up a breezy conversation with a fellow diner, Rafael DaSilva, a 22-year-old Brazilian student who eats there because "it's my food"; and then took a tour of the Cambridge Public Library (826 Cambridge St.) where "ethnic librarian" Ana Morais hosts reading groups in Portuguese for an adjoining children's day school. Inman Square may be a behind-closed-doors community, but those doors are easy to open.

Paulo Pinto, executive director of the Massachusetts Alliance of Portuguese Speakers, has his corner office right on Cambridge Street. Every day, he watches his neighborhood's progress, searching for new faces. "You have people coming from all over the place, but it's still a lot of locals," he says. "They're hanging out, having coffee and talking. The other day, I went to buy paint and all of a sudden, I'm exchanging business cards. It's a neighborhood, really. And it would be cool to have other people come." iB

Diamond Jewelry for the Holidays

THE HOLIDAY SEASON IS FAST APPROACHING AND THE ANNUAL GIFT DILEMMA IS LOOMING. As you consider gift items such as the latest high-tech gadgets, home accessories or fashion, think twice. Don't fall for fleeting trends; consider a gift of lasting value, style and sentiment: diamond jewelry.

For centuries, diamonds have been a cherished gift and a universal symbol of love and devotion. Diamonds, though, represent much more than tradition, these sparkling gems are a personal expression of style.

The latest diamond jewelry designs reflect today's fashion, culture and lifestyle. From elegant three-stone pendants to right hand rings with a "wow" factor, there are diamond jewels to suit every woman's style.

Moreover, diamonds are a natural gift made of pure carbon formed within the earth millions of years ago. They reveal a sparkling, ethereal beauty and at the same time are the hardest natural substance known to man. In fact, the name diamond comes from the Greek word "adamas," meaning unconquerable. Since they were first discovered in India over 4,000 years ago, diamonds have captivated man with their inherent strength and scintillating brilliance.

While diamonds are being redefined in innovative and modern ways, they will always signify classic luxury.

Isn't It Romantic?

One of the hottest gifts is Three-Stone Diamond Jewelry, a romantic notion that symbolizes a couple's past, present and future. Not surprisingly, the three-stone diamond ring is a popular anniversary gift. Three-Stone Diamond Jewelry combines three diamonds of the same shape such as round brilliant, oval or emerald cuts. For a more unique look consider a larger center diamond flanked by trapezoid or shield cut diamonds.

Three-Stone Diamond Jewelry reflects a classic simplicity in diamond drop earrings or elegant pendant necklaces with diamonds cascading down the décolletage. Even celebrities such as Gwyneth Paltrow, Madonna, Sharon Stone and Sarah Jessica Parker have been spotted wearing Three Stone Diamond Jewelry. Decidedly feminine and romantic, Three-Stone Diamond Jewelry is an ideal way to express your love this holiday season.

Classic Cool

Every well-heeled woman needs a wardrobe of basic diamond jewelry such as stud earrings, a pendant necklace and a diamond line bracelet. Classic diamond designs add a touch of luxury to everything from jeans and a T-shirt to eveningwear.

Clearly, women are opting for comfort and convenience more than ever, and classic diamond jewelry has that no-fuss attitude. They are a must-have any season, which makes simple diamond jewels an easy gift item for women of any age or attitude.

princess-cut diamond stud earrings with a matching necklace. Another hot item is the diamond line bracelet available in a wide range of diamond shapes and sizes.

The Right Idea

For those with a fashionable edge, the Diamond Right Hand Ring is the ultimate holiday gift. For centuries, the ring on your left hand has symbolized your love and relationship. Now, women are discovering a wealth of beautiful diamond ring designs for their right hand, giving them a vibrant new means to express their own unique style and personality.

Celebrities are flaunting large, striking Diamond Right Hand Rings as a bold expression of style and luxury. What's more, top fashion houses such as Christian Dior and Chanel have created their own signature versions of the Diamond Right Hand Ring designed specifically for the modern, independent woman.

With an incredible range of inspiration, from organic to spiritual to contemporary art and architecture, there is sure to be a Diamond Right Hand Ring for every woman this holiday season.

Innovative new diamond cuts are for consumers looking to express their individuality. Increasingly, diamantaires are developing their own innovative diamond cuts, giving couples an opportunity to personalize their jewelry. Diamond cuts like the Leo, Elara and Ashoka, as well as branded diamonds such as Rand are among the numerous "signature" diamonds with a novel concept. Plus, many name brand diamonds are laser-inscribed with a signature that is invisible to the naked eye, thus ensuring the authenticity of the gem.

The Ashoka, for instance, presents a distinctive image in its oblong shape with faceted corners. The Elara is a square-shape with cut corners. The Leo Diamond is a 66-faceted stone designed to maximize light refraction and reflection. The Rand comes with a Provenance Report, which tracks the diamond from the mine to cutting room to ensure its country of origin. Each Rand Diamond owner is given the report with their individual diamond, which is cut to specific proportions to ensure the utmost sparkle and brilliance.

The Royal Asscher is a modern version of the authentic Asscher diamond that was popular prior to World War II. The Asscher family partnered with M. Fabrikant, one the largest American diamond companies, to reintroduce the diamond. This square-shape diamond, considered a precursor to the emerald cut, is a step-cut with 74 facets and a high crown to create an understated elegance.

Shop Smart

Did you ever wonder why diamonds of similar size can vary significantly in price? No doubt, shopping for diamond jewelry can be confusing, but with a little knowledge, consumers can confidently shop for diamond jewelry within a budget and still get the "wow" factor.

A great place to get started is browsing reputable Internet sites such as www.adiamondisforever.com for a wide overview of designs and prices. In fact, the Design Gallery presents hundreds of diamond designs from world-class manufacturers and designers along with referrals to nearby retailers who carry the pieces. Among the site's most popular features is the "Design Your Own Ring," which gives consumers the ability to customize either a Three-Stone Diamond ring or Engagement ring with their choice of center diamond, side stones, in gold or platinum.

Once you familiarize yourself with a wide variety of styles and prices, it's important to learn the famous Four C's – Cut, Color, Clarity and Carat Weight – the industry standard for evaluating a diamond's unique characteristics to determine its value.

Cut: In the hands of a skilled diamond cutter, a rough diamond is transformed into a sparkling jewel. Traditional diamond cuts, such as the Round Brilliant, are cut proportionately with 58 facets that reflect and refract light through the diamond to unleash its fiery brilliance. It is the quality of a diamond's cutting proportions, angles, symmetry and finish that give it brilliance, sparkle and the spectral display of rainbow colors that dance across the diamond's facets.

Color: Most diamonds appear white yet nearly all have slight traces of yellow, brown or gray color. The Gemological Institute of America (GIA) color grading scale is an alphabetical scale beginning with the letter D, representing an absolutely colorless diamond, descending alphabetically to the letter Z. The color grades of D, E and F are rare and command top dollar. However, the untrained eye may not be able to tell the difference between diamonds in the D to H grades. Beyond the Z grade, yellow diamonds fall into the "fancy color" category.

Clarity: When light enters a diamond, it is reflected and refracted out. If there is anything disrupting the flow of light in the diamond, such as an inclusion, a proportion of light will be lost. As a result, brilliance could be diminished. Inclusions, which are sometimes referred to as "nature's fingerprints," are usually not visible to the naked eye unless magnified. Inclusions are ranked on a scale of perfection, known as clarity, which was established by the Gemological Institute of America (GIA). The clarity scale, ranging from Flawless to Included is based on the visibility of inclusions at a magnification of 10X. A Flawless diamond is exceptionally rare and valuable. After Flawless, the clarity scale ranges from VVS (very very slightly included) down through the I grades (included).

Carat: The metric carat is the standard unit of weight used for gemstones: One carat weighs 0.200 grams. Some jewelers refer to diamonds using points: 100 points is equal to one carat.

Take note: Recent surveys show that most women say bigger is better when it comes to diamond jewelry. You may decide to compromise slightly on the clarity or color of a stone to get a larger diamond within your budget.

Above all, when it comes to diamond jewelry, buy what you love. A diamond is a gift that will be cherished for its heritage, inherent worth as a precious gem and its sentimental value. You can't go wrong with a gift of diamonds this holiday season.◆

DR. KILLER THRILLER

Keith Ablow, author of the Frank Clevenger mystery series, is a former IMPROPER columnist.

It's one of those delicious truths that, at least sometimes, just a fine glinting line separates sanity and madness. In Keith Ablow's latest novel, Psychopath, the treader of that line is a psychiatrist, Jonah Wrens, who is also a serial killer. Jonah is being pursued by another psychiatrist, Frank Clevenger, hired by the FBI. Cranking up the scintillation another notch—writer Ablow is himself a forensic psychiatrist. Oh, those shrinks! Jonah happens to radiate some kind of intuitive, receptive aura that makes his patients—and his upcoming, unwitting human roadkill—feel safe, understood, listened to. As he stalks his prey, he and Frank engage in an out-on-a-limb mutual therapy of sorts, writing each other letters, in deep, dark brooding tones, that are printed on Page 1 of the New York Times. They challenge each other with swirling theories full of wild psychoanalytic speculations about trauma and passion. That old devil, the unconscious, spits up its irrational contents. Each man speculates about the symbolic meanings of the murders, but the saner Frank is equally on the hot seat, made hotter by the fact that he's dealing with a drug-addicted adopted son. It's an unsettling, exciting ride.

LUCKY LITTLE CONSIGNMENT GIRL

Poor Little Rich Girl, at 416 Highland Ave. in Davis Square, Somerville, is a fancy consignment shop run by Meredith Byam. Open Mon.-Sat., 12-7 pm, and Sun., 12-6 pm. Call 617-684-0157.

From the outside, this shop looks like an attractive venue for new clothes. But inside lie the joyous treasures and plunder of a well-bred consignment shop. Recently, owner Meredith Byam scored a huge haul from Birke's, a famous department store in Lowell. Never-worn clothes bear fading price tags from the 1940s through the '60s. There are coats, scooter dresses with cute little shorts and lounging gowns that are the fashion equivalents of Dorian Gray. You'll also find solid coats, often heroically double-breasted, brightly colored or plaid, with pleats, flares, belts, furry collars and starbursts on the back. Old movies and Jackie O. come to mind. Some items tip toward the rarified end, with jolts of Versace, Dolce & Gabbana and Marc Jacobs. One pair of Manolo Blahnik shoes still sports an original price tag of $1,900—talk about diamonds in the soles! (They're much cheaper now.) More often, though, it's contemporary clothes—a pretty pink cuffed suit, an intricately patterned Scandinavian sweater, a short, sparkly patterned black dress for dancing and lots of jeans (actually used but looking new).

TRAVEL FIRST-CLASS BY COACH

Arena Group is a results-oriented coaching service in Cambridge, for individuals and companies. Clients can get one month of weekly half-hour phone sessions for a price similar to therapy. Participants can opt for a weekly fax supporting their goals, or check-ins with a coach between sessions. Call 617-491-2661 or visit www.arenacoaching.com.

First what Arena Group is not: Its consultants are not "fluffy" coaches, and they assiduously avoid creating the sticky dependency that in therapy is called transference. Nor do they purport to motivate you with pie in some distant sky. Putting the cart before the horse, in a sense, they help clients crystallize goals, thereby creating the desire to reach those goals. With zest, warmth and an exhilarating just-do-it kick, Bet Mac - Arthur and Lynda Hill, with their respective backgrounds in therapy and business, help you first identify that single get-going action that will get you moving toward some postponed, feared or even much-desired goal. Like crowds funneling into a gate, the swirl of intentions, avoidances and information is brought to bear on that one pure thing. The long-delayed thesis, the paralyzing bills, the itchily considered geographical or career move, the hard-to-find windows of family time—these are distilled down to goals with firm deadlines. Clients' learning styles and values are considered, but participants should be ready to accept the cutting-room floor sacrifices and trade-offs that are often necessitated by new decisions and priorities.

REVIEW

FLIGHT OF FANCY

Chef/owner Tim Partridge finds a bigger nest for Perdix in the South End

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY DEREK KOUYOUMJIAN

Talented chef Tim Partridge first attracted attention among the city's foodies with his tiny restaurant on Centre Street in Jamaica Plain. When he and his former manager at that enterprise, Krista Kranyak, parted company several months ago, Kranyak stayed at the JP location (which she turned into Ten Tables, reviewed in this space eight months ago). Partridge kept the name, Perdix, and applied it to his new restaurant on Tremont Street.

The new Perdix is located in the space of the former Truc, a restaurant that had a long and successful run under Corinna Mozo, and a shorter but no less distinguished tenure under her successor, Philip Wang. Hence, in addition to venturing into the competitive South End dining scene, Partridge has large shoes to fill. So far, he has succeeded admirably. Perdix's limited menu and nightly specials provide a good range of tastefully conceived and well-executed dishes.

From the half dozen appetizer selections, I tried the grilled figs with arugula, prosciutto, Parmesan and blood orange vinaigrette ($9). Notwithstanding the chill in the late autumn air, this warm-weather dish delighted with the taste and texture contrasts provided by sweet, coarse-textured figs; pleasantly bitter, tender arugula; smoky-salty, crisp prosciutto; creamy-sweet Parmesan cheese; and citrusy vinaigrette. More suited to the cold weather were the braised short ribs with maple and sage ($9). This dish, with its in-your-face robustness, came bathed in a dark sauce rendered from the braising liquid and spiked with maple. As testimony to its fall-off-the-bone tenderness, it was served without the bone.

A special appetizer one evening, a duck confit salad ($10), featured shredded duck confit, with fresh chicory and preserved dark cherries. The savory flavor of the duck met my expectations, and its dry texture was rescued by the moistness of a well-balanced vinaigrette. The only real disappointment among the appetizers was the mussels with white wine, garlic and tomatoes ($10). While I applauded their presentation—in an attractive white bowl with an identical bowl inverted as a cover to retain the heat and serve as a receptacle for the shells—the mussels' flavor ranged from bland to ripe, and the insipid broth added nothing.

Listed main courses, also six in number, included a superb roasted monkfish with French lentils, brown butter cauliflower and sweet garlic gremolata ($21). This underappreciated fish, sometimes called mock lobster because of its texture, takes particularly well to roasting, which preserves that texture. In Perdix's preparation, the roasting had the added benefit of mellowing the garlic and browning the butter that coated the toothsome, al dente cauliflower florettes. Green apple and smoked cheddar stuffed chicken ($19) came with crisp skin, succulent flesh and a marvelous assortment of garnishes including wild rice, currants, pecans and hearty chunks of earthy carrots. The cheddar and apple stuffing married compatible tastes that enhanced the first-rate flavor of the chicken without overwhelming it.

Cornmeal fried scallops with butternut squash, bacon and bourbon cream ($22) yielded a generous mound of cape scallops—midway in size between tiny bay and large sea scallops—that had been lightly breaded and quickly fried, sealing in their sweet goodness and preserving their tenderness. The soft butternut squash, cut into bite-size cubes, provided a felicitous counterpoint to a garnish of mild, slightly resilient blanched fennel. Pork has made its way onto the menus of almost all of Boston's serious restaurants, and Perdix's roast pork chop with vanilla-whipped sweet potato, port-soaked prunes, endive and walnuts belongs in the upper ranks of area pork dishes. A hefty double rib, a good two inches thick, it had been partially sliced away from the bone. With its remarkably tender flesh, the result, no doubt, of a long soak in a marinade or more likely brine, the pork had the kind of flavor that evoked fond memories of Sunday dinner at home. The sweet potatoes, with their hauntingly delicious infusion of vanilla, were whipped to a smooth puree. Sliced endive, sugared walnuts and plump prunes, drunk on port, added to this kaleidoscope of flavors and textures. This was an extraordinary dish.

For a small restaurant, Perdix has a well-constructed wine list that includes some interesting and infrequently encountered wines and a number of good values. A glass of Vernaccia ($6), a well-balanced, medium-bodied white from Tuscany—it is the only white grape variety grown in that region—went splendidly with seafood, while a glass of Chinon ($6), a red from the Loire Valley—usually associated solely with white wines—complimented the pork. A bottle of Chateau Jonqueyres ($27), a remarkably full-bodied 2000 Bordeaux Superieur (a blend in which cabernet sauvignon predominated) went particularly well with the short ribs. Perdix's excellent bread would make it a challenge to adhere to an Atkins regime. Procured from Sel de la Terre's bakery, these chewy-crusted baguettes would have been even more enjoyable had they not been served with a bizarre, almost disagreeable dipping sauce that combined olive oil and some derivative of tomato.

While Perdix's main courses were uniformly outstanding, the desserts, each $7, were uneven. The "freakin' good" chocolate cake, moist and almost intoxicatingly rich, boasted an intense chocolate flavor enlivened with espresso coffee. Warm apple cake, on the other hand, suffered from dryness. A third dessert, pumpkin bread pudding with crème fraîche ice cream, delivered good, spicy pudding and sauce, but the ice cream lacked flavor.

Perdix's capacity is just over 50 diners—40 in the main dining room, where banquettes line the walls, and another dozen or so in a small greenhouse to the rear of the restaurant. While I feared that our seating in the greenhouse might cause us to be ignored or overlooked on a busy Saturday evening, my apprehensions proved unfounded. Although our table was really too small to hold the plates of four diners, bread basket, votive candle, wine bottle and glasses, the excellence of the cuisine made this minor inconvenience fade. Our experienced and attentive waiter—a holdover from Truc—took excellent care of us despite the frenetic pace that a steady stream of patrons imposed. He recognized me from my visits to Truc, but if he knew my mission, it did not cause him to confer any greater degree of attention on our party than he displayed with respect to other tables. From what I could see, all the patrons of this estimable eatery appeared to be enjoying well-paced, efficient service. iB

DISH

Things That Make You Go "Moo"

Atkins deluxe…farm harm…raw truths

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Role-playing of raw ingredients usually doesn't figure in a chef's repertoire. After all, who wants to reenact the growth curve of a stalk of broccoli?

Ah, but Kobe beef, that's another story. These cattle lead a pampered existence that's a shining example of blissful ignorance. Born into the privileged family of Japanese cattle known as Wagyu, they are fed a diet generously enriched with beer. They receive regular massages, and in short, are indulged to within an inch of their lives, after which time they make an equally rarefied appearance on the plates of pampered gastronomes.

For centuries, the only Wagyu cattle lived in Japan's Kobe region. Only royalty and other elite had access to—and the means to afford—Kobe beef. Today, a few ranches in California adhere to strict guidelines to raise Wagyu cattle that will yield the legendary meat. Some Boston restaurants now serve Kobe beef, but Grill 23 & Bar is the first to feature it in three main courses: Kobe Delmonico steak in 10- and 16-ounce portions, and Kobe steak Diane, with Dijon-cognac cream. Grill 23 is also the first local restaurant whose executive chef, Jay Murray, dared to walk a metaphorical mile in the cattle's hooves.

Grill 23 & Bar general manager Jason Babb treats chef Jay Murray like a slab of Kobe beef.

According to tradition, happy cattle produce the finest, most tender beef. So Murray subjected himself to an experiment: He bravely drank beer while submitting to a massage at the muscular hands of Grill 23's general manager, Jason "Magic Fingers" Babb. Babb reports that Murray was, indeed, happy. "He asked me if he could trade his wife in—she's got really small hands," he says. And the Kobe beef? You can have your Happy Meal—this plush-textured, richly flavored beef is more like an Ecstasy Meal. Diners are feeling the happiness too. "The consensus is really positive," says Babb, who adds that the ultra-luxurious beef is almost as popular as filet mignon and New York sirloin.

The dark side of the moo: Not all livestock is raised in spa-like surroundings. If you want to take a look at how they all-too-often keep 'em down on the farm, check out a movie that's as close as your computer: www.themeatrix.com. It's an animated feature that's no Charlotte's Web. In fact, it might prompt you to consider a fling with "raw food." Raw foodists, who believe that heating foods above 115 degrees kills nutrients, and eat a totally vegan diet, are obviously not a target demographic for cookbook publishers. However, that hasn't stopped Healthy Living Books from publishing The Complete Book of Raw Food: Healthy, Delicious Vegetarian Cuisine Made with Living Foods. A sample recipe—sweet potato soup that calls for blending shredded potato, chopped onion, apple, garlic and seasonings with water—makes one wonder: Why do we need a recipe for compost? iB

Music: Radio Rivalry

This month, local radio stations duke it out for the biggest and best holiday concert lineup...ever (according to the hype, that is). Three worthy of notice are the WBCN XMas Rave, KISS 108's Jingle Ball and the Mix 98.5 Holiday Hoedown. WBCN spreads the cheer around to six different venues on Dec. 3: Avalon (featuring Rancid, Brand New and Switchfoot), Middle East (Kings of Leon and Black Rebel Motorcycle Club), the Orpheum (Blink-182, Eve 6 and Something Corporate), the Paradise (Ryan Adams and Bleu), T.T. the Bear's (Yellowcard, Billy Talent and Damone) and Axis (Alien Ant Farm, Smile Empty Soul, Three Days Grace and Crystal Method). A ticket gets you admission to a specific venue, and there are early and late shows for those with the stamina to check out more than one. KISS 108 and Mix 98.5, meanwhile, take the palooza approach. On Dec. 15 at Lowell's Tsongas Arena, see Clay Aiken, Dido, Hilary Duff, Jessica Simpson, Nick Lachey, Maroon 5, Sean Paul, Simple Plan and Stacie Orrico at KISS 108's Jingle Ball. The next day, Mix 98.5's Holiday Hoedown at the Orpheum features Howie Day, Melissa Etheridge, Gavin DeGraw, Guster and Sarah McLachlan. See Music on page 66 for more information.

THROUGHOUT DECEMBER

Performing Arts: It's Beginning to Look a Lot Like Christmas...

You've got a ton of options to get into the holiday spirit this year. There are the traditional shows like Boston's Ballet's The Nutcracker (see it this year, as it may not be around in '04). But there's also José Mateo's The Nutcracker, Not the Nutcracker! and Urban Nutcracker. Then there are three different versions of A Christmas Carol, one of which stars Stacy Keach, a.k.a. Mike Hammer, at the Cutler Majestic Theatre. Add to that list holiday favorites Black Nativity and the Christmas Revels. And if those aren't enough to make you start seeing red...and green, try the two satires, John Kuntz's My Life with the Kringle Kult and Ryan Landry's Who's Afraid of the Virgin Mary?, for a little comic relief. See Performing Arts on page 56 for more information.

SAT./DEC. 13

CityScope: How Bizarre

Judging by how many folks turned up at last year's Bazaar Bizarre, the most offbeat crafts fair imaginable, you've probably already heard the hype. This year, the bazaar is open for twice as long as in previous years, allowing more folks to shop for oddities like bowls made out of records, flower vases crafted from blenders, political T-shirts and hand-knit beer cozies—all made by local artisans. In addition to the hipster vendors hawking their wares, there's plenty of entertainment to keep things interesting: punk rock makeovers by Keira Flynn-Carson, sets by local DJs including the Punk Rock Aerobics team, and holiday theremin carols performed by WMBR DJ Jonny "Spaceman" Bernhardt. And if you want to take home a memento, you can get your picture taken with Sleazy Santa and his Naughty Elves...in a sleigh bed. Ho, ho, ho. Dilboy VFW, Davis Square, Somerville (617-666-8794). 4–10 pm, www.bazaarbizarre.org.

Poetri performs in Russell Simmons' Def Poetry Jam.

TUE./DEC. 9–
SUN./DEC. 14

Performing Arts: A Slammin' Good Time

Think all poets are quiet, bookish types? Think again. The eight poet superstars of Russell Simmons' Def Poetry Jam are anything but retiring as they confront (and we don't use that word lightly) issues like 9/11, obesity, government and identity for two straight hours. Add a DJ spinning music by Marvin Gaye, the O'Jays, the Fugees, Outkast and Biggie Smalls, and you get one of the most unique experiences you'll ever have at the normally staid Colonial Theatre. A word of warning: Throw on a slicker before you go—when these poets start to jam, the spit flies. Winner of a Tony Award for the Best Special Theatrical Event, Def Poetry Jam stars slam poets Beau Sia, Black Ice, Mayda Del Valle, Georgia Me, Suheir Hammad, Lemon, Poetri and Bassey Ikpi, who take turns expounding on the virtues of a Krispy Kreme doughnut or recounting the horrors of passing through airport security. The result is an energizing, penetrating and entertaining look at the world we live in—all set to music by DJ Jedi. Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-931-2787). Dec. 9–14. $25–$65.

Four-legged friends and their masters redefine friendly competition in a barking spectacle

Roll over to the Bay Colony Cluster Dog Show, Dec. 4-7.

A new set of contestants is in town for a reality show that features more energy, ambition and hair-sprayed divas than the cast of Joe Millionaire. Freshly primped poodles, shih tzus, terriers and 160 other breeds strut their stuff during the Bay Colony Cluster Dog Show, Dec. 4-7. The talent component of the show includes a timed obstacle course, where canine competitors race through jumps and tunnels. In the obedience trials, dogs compete at important pooch pastimes like retrieving and scent discrimination.

While man's best friend is busy competing for the Best in Show trophy awarded at the end of each day, humans can peruse the concession booths. Holiday gifts ranging from diamond collars to hand-knitted sweaters and gourmet treats can be purchased for a quadruped friend, and breeders are on hand to answer questions from dog-seekers. A portion of proceeds benefits dog-related organizations.

Enlightenment is elusive in Cruise's Last Samurai

BY PAUL SHERMAN

I liked The Last Samurai much better when I saw it the first time—as Dances with Wolves. The new movie tells a similar tale of a disillusioned American soldier who reinvents himself after spending time with "primitives" his Army opposes. In this case, though, Captain Nathan Algren (Tom Cruise) steeps himself in the ways of Japan's samurai, not the Indians of the Wild West.

Tom Cruise plays disillusioned American soldier Captain Nathan Algren.

A witness to George Custer's brutal campaigns against the Indians, Algren heads to Japan as a reluctant member of a team of American officers sent to train the forces of Japan's imperial government in squashing opposition to the modernization of Japan in the 1870s. Taken prisoner after the Japanese and American higher-ups force the green trainees into attacking a band of samurai, with disastrous results, Algren comes to respect the honor of warlord Katsumoto (Ken Watanabe), the discipline of Katsumoto's warriors and the gentility of their community. Like the Indians back home, they're nothing like the government said they were.

I also liked this story much better when Tom Cruise wasn't in it. Only Cruise could make Kevin Costner seem modest, but as it has so often, Cruise's star treatment and need to dominate the story tear the stuffing out of The Last Samurai. This latest Cruise vehicle falls into the "humbled Cruise" mini-genre that also includes Jerry Maguire, Vanilla Sky and Minority Report. In these films, the star either won't let his character get genuinely humbled or simply can't portray humility. Typically, in The Last Samurai, the "humbling" of Cruise results in no real loss to Algren. (In fact, the utter defeat to the samurai only vindicates Algren, who told his superiors the troops weren't ready.)

At the samurai mountain camp where the victors take wounded Algren, he's nursed back to health by the warlord's sister (Koyuki), who also is the widow of a warrior Algren killed in the battle. Naturally, she falls for him, in an unconvincing romantic subplot. Meanwhile, the spiritual enlightenment that accompanies Algren's physical recuperation and leads him to switch sides in the battle just doesn't wash, because trying to attach spirituality to Cruise is like trying to connect two magnets on the equally charged sides. They repel each other. With Johnny Depp, Daniel Day-Lewis or Sean Penn in the part, it might have worked; with Cruise, forget it.

The glorification of Cruise/Algren pushes aside everything else as The Last Samurai progresses. At one point, unarmed Algren defeats four sword-wielding attackers (and they're not green trainees). Later, when it comes time for the outmanned samurai to make their last stand and claim at least a moral victory over their ruthless opponents, the imperial forces, now supplied with the latest American weapons, mow down samurai with rapid-fire Howitzers. But does Algren meet the same fate as these superior warriors? Don't get me started.

Previous movies directed by Edward Zwick, such as Glory, Courage Under Fire and The Siege, have long saluted those who act in service of others or dig for hidden truths. There are elements of that social conscience in The Last Samurai, too. The American government indulging in questionable "nation building" abroad in this story certainly recalls Vietnam and Iraq, and here the government shows little concern for the Japanese; it just wants a market in which it can sell weapons. The movie also shows a healthy cynicism toward power structures, with both the American superior officer (Tony Goldwyn) and the Japanese politician (Masato Harada) who are brokering the two nations' deals being concerned only with what they'll gain.

But the weight of having Cruise atop The Last Samurai puts a dent in Zwick's social conscience. It rings especially false for a movie that looks askance at such selfish behavior in its characters to tolerate the same from its star. The Last Samurai has its heart in the right place, but lacks credibility from the start. And how potent would Glory have been had Matthew Broderick's Robert Gould Shaw lived while all of his African-American troops died around him? For all its big-budget ambition, The Last Samurai is compromised in epic proportions. iB

The Last Samurai ★★

Directed by Edward Zwick. Written by John Logan, Marshall Herskovitz and Zwick. With Tom Cruise, Ken Watanabe, Timothy Spall, Koyuki, Tony Goldwyn and Billy Connolly. Rated R. Warner Bros.

Bad Santa ★★★½
Finally, a Christmas movie about a degenerate. A cussing, sex-addicted, drunk degenerate in a Santa suit. Billy Bob Thornton is an absolute hoot as the department store St. Nick who, with his midget, elf-costumed partner (the equally ticked-off Tony Cox), sets up shop every December in a different city and a different store, and then robs the store safe on Christmas Eve. This Santa's aversion to anything and everything besides drink and tail makes him an unrepentant poster boy for misanthropy, while director Terry Zwigoff (Ghost World) again proves his integrity by not wimping out with a soft, Elf-style ending. Full of bad taste and good laughs. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Elephant ★★
The plodding artsy touches in Gus Van Sant's movie, especially all those tracking shots of characters walking and walking (left over from his Gerry), make this the clear runner-up to Zero Day in the Columbine-inspired indie movie sweepstakes. The idea is sound: matter-of-factly following a group of characters on the day of a school shooting—some are victims, some are shooters, some are neither. In doing so, the movie exposes all sorts of little everyday details. But there's little drama, little emotion, little reason to care. It seems more like a science project than a tragedy. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Elf ★★½
The tale of a human (Will Ferrell) raised by North Pole elves, who travels to New York to find his biological father (James Caan), is amusing most of the way. Jon Favreau's direction adds some unexpected touches, like a strong eye for casting small parts well. But much of the good time is spoiled by the over-the-top, cloying, "heartwarming" ending. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

In America ★★★

Kill Bill—Vol. 1 ★★
Within the first few minutes of Volume 1 of Quentin Tarantino's long-awaited action epic—the second half arrives in February—you get four 1970s references. There's the Shaw Brothers' "Shawscope" logo from the team's old martial arts films, the swirly "Our Feature Presentation" intro that cinemas showed back then, a circa-1970 Klingons reference and a taste of the Ironside theme song. Those references go to show that Tarantino's style, cool and clever a decade ago, is now only as adventurous as an episode of VH1's I Love the '70s. Make that VH1 with literal geysers of blood. Tarantino's story is a revenge tale with Uma Thurman as a modern-day warrior seeking revenge on the assassins who left her for dead. The pop-cultural quotes come fast and hard—spaghetti westerns, Japanese manga comics, Tarantino's own Reservoir Dogs, etc.—so much so that you wish he would just settle down and let his characters and words do their jobs, as in the movie's best sequence, when the warrior enlists a philosophical Okinawan sword maker (Sonny Chiba). Let's hope the second half has more stretches like that. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Lost in Translation ★★★½
Sofia Coppola dealt with shared pain in her 2001 directorial debut, The Virgin Suicides, and she conjures up a similar funny-sad tone in her tale of two Americans (Bill Murray, Scarlett Johansson) adrift in Tokyo. He's a washed-up movie star making a bundle endorsing Japanese booze; she's the wife of a work-consumed photographer (Giovanni Ribisi). They're staying at the same hotel and killing time at the same hotel bar, and their misery loves company. The characters make a great movie couple, although their relationship is platonic (with its share of sexual tension). Murray gives a Buster Keaton–like, sad-clown performance built mainly around physical and especially facial reactions to absurd situations, and Johansson is a little heartbreaker. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Love Actually ★★

Veteran English writer Richard Curtis (Four Weddings and a Funeral) makes his directorial debut with this shameless romantic comedy, which operates under the same say-it-loud and pile-on-the-exclamation-points concept as the oversized greeting card. In his movie's case, that means he piles on about eight half-baked romantic subplots, hoping they'll miraculously accumulate into one big plot. If only. Nearly all of these subplots are flimsy and shallow, especially one with Hugh Grant as the new English prime minister. Unfortunately, Grant is back to his pre-2000 bumbling. Bill Nighy, as a desperate, aging rock star, and Rowan Atkinson (a frequent Curtis collaborator) add genuine comic relief occasionally. But a romantic movie as weak as this should not be allowed to use a song as good as the Beach Boys' "God Only Knows" during its climax. There oughta be a law. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World ★★★

An intense, eye-popping opening battle and director Peter Weir's realistic storytelling help this naval epic sail over dull patches, gabby interludes and ho-hum subplots. The level of authenticity is so much higher than in any mere piece of spectacle in this 1805 story of the crew of an English ship that is attacked by a French ship, and then spends the rest of the movie tracking it to get revenge. Russell Crowe plays the battle-wise captain, and Paul Bettany is the ship's inquisitive scientist. And though these friends' dialogues about the merits of science can't compare with the action sequences, Crowe especially breathes great life into his character. For once, the special effects serve the story in a big movie, and not the other way around. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Matrix Revolutions ★★

The first Matrix had a thrilling sense of discovery, but ultimately, this trilogy had little to offer once that initial excitement was gone. How did that lively original ever morph into the ponderous, self-important saga in this second sequel? They ought to hand you Cliffs Notes going into this one, because unless you're a no-lifer who's seen the previous movies 10 times, it's hard to follow the many plot intricacies, and the movie does little to reacquaint you. As in the first sequel, the bad guys—specifically Hugo Weaving's Agent Smith and Lambert Wilson and Monica Bellucci's Eurotrash couple—offer most of the fun. Aside from Jada Pinkett Smith, the heroes are robotic stiffs, while the fight scenes verge on self-parody and the Neo-as-Christ climax is worth a snicker or three. (At Boston Common, Fenway, suburbs and IMAX theaters.)

The Missing ★½

Endless, bloated and bland as a Saturday night in Wichita, Ron Howard's western features a flimsy plot, underdeveloped characters and his own tired direction. Cate Blanchett plays an 1880s frontier woman whose daughter (Evan Rachel Wood) is kidnapped by Indians, while Tommy Lee Jones plays her estranged father, who "went Indian" long ago and now offers to help find the girl, despite his daughter's resentment of him. Along the way, Blanchett's character learns that there are good Indians and bad Indians, that Indian healing can work where her sort of healing won't and that dad isn't the total dirtbag she thought he was. But don't expect this soggy, soulless movie to actually have a point of view. Every time a benefit of Indian, "nontraditional" culture pops up, a benefit of Eurocentric, Christian culture is sure to follow, and vice versa. And every time a drawback of Indian culture comes up, a drawback of Eurocentric culture falls in place, too. This is multiculturalism in the worst, safest sense. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Mystic River ★★

Where are Robert Mitchum and The Friends of Eddie Coyle when you need them? Clint Eastwood's adaptation of Dennis Lehane's novel would like to be the same sort of somber, blue-collar crime story as that 1970s Boston-shot classic. But this disappointing film is plodding and literally and figuratively murky. Eastwood assembles a great cast whose efforts don't always pay off, especially Sean Penn, whose character, Jimmy, suffers most from the loss of the novel's background detail. Kevin Bacon and Tim Robbins play the other two childhood friends whose fates become intertwined anew when Jimmy's daughter is murdered—one is the detective investigating the crime and the other is the prime suspect. As a whodunit, this is competent enough, but its ambitions run larger than that, and its reach exceeds its grasp. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

One from the Heart ★★★½

Francis Coppola's dazzling, much-maligned 1982 movie gets a deserved big-screen reissue before its DVD debut. But don't hesitate, because this is probably a quick revisit. Coppola's story of Las Vegas couple Teri Garr and Frederic Forrest breaking up, and perhaps making up, on their July 4 anniversary has one of the great song scores of any film, by Tom Waits (mainly in duets with, of all people, Crystal Gayle). Filmed in eye-popping color on studio sets, it's full of spine-tingling moments of adventurous style, while the story boasts a bittersweetness you'd never find in a Hollywood romance these days. (At Kendall Square.)

School of Rock ★★★½

Jack Black has the big-screen breakthrough he's been destined for ever since his scene-stealing role in High Fidelity. Here, he's a failed rock-and-roller who impersonates a substitute teacher and schools his fourth-graders to be his new band. Writer Mike White, who also plays a supporting role, tailored the story to Black's manic talents, and he and director Richard Linklater (Dazed & Confused) take what could have been a lame David Spade or Rob Schneider movie and made a very funny, genuinely feel-good movie. So, the next time one of those painful movies starring a Saturday Night Live cast member comes out, remember it didn't have to be so bad. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Shattered Glass ★★★

The story of Stephen Glass, the hotshot New Republic reporter who turned out to have faked most of his articles, becomes a fascinating drama that avoids the usual stodginess of docudramas. Instead of showing us the hows and whys of Glass' fakery—does anyone really know those besides Glass himself?—the movie presents Glass (Hayden Christensen) as an eager-to-please go-getter who appears to be taken in himself by his own veneer of guilelessness (and also appears to be the best coworker anyone could ever have). That self-deception may be the biggest and most interesting deceit in the movie, which also touches upon entertainment's dangerous seductive power over journalism. The strong supporting cast includes Peter Saarsgard, Chloe Sevigny, Hank Azaria and Melanie Lynskey. (At Kendall Square.)

The Station Agent ★★★

This comedy about a dwarf (Peter Dinklage) who moves into an abandoned train depot in a small New Jersey town might have been a cloyingly quirky indie film. Instead, it's a pretty special experience. Dinklage's deadpan performance as Fin wryly captures how his character's expectations of his fellow man have been pounded down by their reaction to his height. Broader comedy comes from Bobby Canavale, as a food-truck owner who tries to befriend Fin, and Patricia Clarkson, as a woman escaping a fizzled marriage whom Fin tries to befriend. There's a wise and endearing clash of humanity here, and an unpredictable story to go along with it. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

21 Grams ★★

Director Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu used time to great effect in his bracing debut, Amores Perros. In his follow-up (his first American-made movie), his use of nonlinear structure doesn't go so smoothly. Again Gonzalez blends three stories—of a newly widowed woman (Naomi Watts), a born-again ex-con (Benicio Del Toro) and a terminally ill professor (Sean Penn)—but the film's first half is so hyperactive that it's hard to get into it. That's when the action jumps so often—in time, and among the three characters—that it lacks a center. When the film finally settles down, and we see the three lives intersect, the action gets genuinely dramatic at last, and Watts' raw performance is especially compelling. But that first half is a big price to pay to get to the second. (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Zero Day ★★★½

The thought of a movie inspired by the Columbine school shooting isn't very appealing. But director and cowriter Ben Coccio's debut is a very potent and totally involving tale of two high school outsiders (Andre Kreuck, Calvin Robertson) planning just such an attack. The movie is comprised of excerpts from the video diary the characters are filming to chronicle their preparations for the big day, and the action feels amazingly authentic. Kreuck and Robertson are simply tremendous. They're also smart and initially likeable, which makes their characters' on-camera gun demonstrations and their climactic attack all the more tragic. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Blues Blood

Avant-jazz guitar legend James Blood Ulmer reveals his Southern soul through his reincarnation as a blues preacher

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

James Blood Ulmer fondly embraces a two-decade-old memory of playing Streets, a long-defunct Allston punk club where he unleashed the volcanic hybrid of jazz, funk and blues he forged on early '80s landmark albums Free Lancing and Black Rock.

"A power club we called it," says Ulmer, a South Carolina native who honed his chops with organ combos and free-jazz maverick Ornette Coleman. "You could play real loud."

Ulmer will be working at a different volume, however, when he pulls into Johnny D's Dec. 11 in his current incarnation as a surprisingly traditional blues player. "It's just another addition to the family," according to Ulmer, who says his current music fits Coleman's hard-to-define "harmolodic" approach (in which all instruments share rhythmic, melodic and harmonic roles) because he is still finding the best way to adapt to varied situations. "Coleman told me I was a natural harmolodic player, so I only had to worry about how I am as a person."

James Blood Ulmer brings his harmolodic style to Johnny D's Dec. 11.

In any case, Ulmer's deep, rough-hewn singing voice and barbed, angular playing style inspired long-admiring guitar protégé Vernon Reid of the rock band Living Colour to suggest that Ulmer try blues. "He was very serious about making a blues record," Ulmer says of Reid, who himself once served with Coleman disciple Ronald Shannon Jackson. "I never thought about it."

"I never would have thought about doing somebody else's songs," Ulmer says from his New York home. "Vernon picked the songs, got the band, got the studio and all I did was [show up]. He didn't even let me know what songs I was doing until two or three days before the session."

Their first session, at Memphis' famed Sun Studios, yielded 2001's Memphis Blood, a disc of standards that was released days before September 11 on a record label that shut down a week later. Nonetheless, the CD earned a Grammy nomination.

This year, Ulmer and producer Reid teamed up for No Escape from the Blues, recorded at New York's Electric Lady Studios, Jimi Hendrix's legendary facility. Opening with the jug band–styled "Goin' to New York," the CD traces the migration of blues from the South to the urban North—a path that Ulmer himself followed—and shows Ulmer moving toward a unique bridge between a traditional and contemporary repertoire.

Guests include singer Queen Esther and two old Ulmer associates, trumpeter Olu Dara and electric violinist Charlie Burnham, whose wah-wah attack blends with Ulmer's and Reid's guitars.

Ulmer ranges from a whispery shuffle through "Who's Been Talkin' "—sounding more Tom Waits than Howlin' Wolf—to a version of "Trouble in Mind" undercut with an Indian drone to a romp through Earl King's "Come On (Let the Good Times Roll)" that nods to Hendrix's cover of the tune.

"I knew those songs like you know 'The Star-Spangled Banner' or the Lord's Prayer," says Ulmer, 61, whose father was a Baptist deacon and later a preacher. "I was 20 years old before segregation left. So I know those songs from a child, those old blues songs. My daddy used to hum those songs. It would tie in with church music. It would sound the same way without words if you were humming it." As a preteen, Ulmer also sang in a gospel quartet called the Southern Sons. "That quartet music had the same feeling as the blues," he adds. "We were just singing about Jesus."

However, while Ulmer's father taught him to play guitar at age 4, his mother disapproved of the blues. "One guy used to get drunk, and take out that guitar and start playing blues," Ulmer says. "So she didn't think it was the kind of stuff for me to listen to."

Now, all these years later, he has secured a new niche. "I got a good concept of solo blues," says Ulmer, who includes haunting solo versions of his originals "Are You Glad to Be in America?" and "Satisfy (Story of My Life)" on No Escape. "You speak the way you feel, or tell the truth about some story. It's like a Baptist preacher."

He plans to do solo blues at Johnny D's, without the Reid-assembled Memphis Blood Blues Band from his recent CDs. But Ulmer also hopes to find two Boston rhythm players to back him on his own music, if he can get them an advance tape.

"I want somebody who really wants to play with me," Ulmer says. "If there are some funk players, that would be good." He says he intends to play vocal tunes, since instrumentals demand more preparation. But when he's told that Johnny D's also presents jazz on occasion, Ulmer's harmolodic spirit kicks in. "If there are some jazz players that can play my music," he chimes, "then I've got music for them too." iB

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

It was at a little get-together for Oberlin, Macalester and Carleton alumni. You're a Macalester alum who recently moved back to Mass to help with your family's inn. I'm the long-haired Oberlin alum who's a massage therapist here in Boston and was asking whether your inn was haunted. I would like to have had more conversation with you, but fellow alumni came and you were reminiscing about soccer with them and I didn't get a chance.

Over a year has passed, and all roads seem to lead me back to this place with you. I try to respect and accept what I see before me. I know I cannot possess something that belongs to someone else, as much as it still makes me grind my teeth and clench my fists. Despite all of this, there you are, always on the edge of my consciousness. I don't know what it is...the flirtations, the looks, the awkward subtext to every passing touch or look across a room that runs like electricity through me. My mask always stays on, not only because I try to show respect for your happiness, but to conceal the genuine delight your smile has a way of giving me. I have come to accept that it is something that does run deep in me. My recent ex did not know your name, but he knew you were there the entire time, somewhere in my heart... something that could not be touched because it belongs to you. I guess now I have to tell the whole world here, because I just don't know what else to do as I try to move on. Always know that there is a big part of me that wishes you could have been my man...and that I didn't have to wear any masks, and that the good and bad was all out there in plain view. I know that I can be the one who is complicated and a hard nut to crack, but so are you. How else would I really want it? I hope that this all means something to you. XXOO.

—Say Goodbye?! Say Hello?!

Meet me at the SnowBall Dec. 5?

I know you are more comfortable in jeans, but when I saw you in that tux, I melted. You were playing blackjack at the next table; a pile of chips indicated your skill. I came over to watch and you noticed my interest. You closed out your marker and escorted me to the ballroom, where you took me into your arms and...I woke up! I know you're out there, reading the Impersonals. Maybe we will find each other December 5 at the SnowBall. I'll be wearing a tight, black, strapless gown...looking my best and hoping you notice me. Not sure who I am? I'll wear a silver "C" around my neck to help you spot me among all the other beautiful women. Don't miss our only opportunity to finally get together.

Lady Blue

Our eyes met at the MFA, in the bistro area. I was with another woman and you were with a lady friend. We made eye contact as you approached your table to the front and to my left. My first thought was: "stunning." Dark blond hair, gorgeous figure, ruby-red lips and a wonderful smile. Your clothes were simple but classy—light blue slacks, dark blue sweater. You are simply blessed with beauty. I nodded and you smiled. But what I remember most: our mutual glances across the floor to one another. When our eyes met there was so much electricity! We weren't even smiling—it was attraction at first sight and desire. My lady friend finally wanted to leave. I think she knew my heart wasn't with her. And when I actually realized I had forgotten my sunglasses and returned to the table, alas, you were gone. I want very much to hear your voice. RSVP.

Bussholes

To two of the most ignorant people ever to ride a bus—a man and woman talking about vacations. The woman says she was thinking Hawaii, Aruba or the Bahamas. The man says that they're all nice but at least if she were to go to Hawaii, it's "American" and she won't have to deal with all the "natives" trying to sell her their shit. The woman agrees, saying that when she was in Jamaica the natives harassed her every day about getting her hair braided, like she'd ever do that. Listen: You're both self-absorbed wastes of life. You have enough money to go on vacations when those "natives" don't have enough money for food or clothes. No wonder the rest of the world hates us.

From MN to the E Line

At the end of the day on Nov. 18, we boarded the T at Longwood and listened to some memorable announcements from the driver before strolling into Downtown Crossing together. I enjoyed our brief conversation (your thoughtful observations on public transit, missing the lakes, Manchester-by-the-Sea) and certainly your good sense of humor. After meeting again while shopping, I wished I had invited you to join me for a cup of coffee or tea. I hope you'll see this and give me a chance to extend the offer.

Soup Star

I was patronizing the Fenway Star Market on the evening of Oct. 31. I was foraging for fresh cilantro for my famous gazpacho soup. As I reached for my cilantro stalks, I noticed a slender, graceful hand reaching for fresh spinach leaves. The spinach leaves were tossed up on the top shelf.

Being much taller, I politely reached for the freshest-looking spinach leaf bundle and handed it to you. What I saw struck me like a frozen lightning bolt! Your blazing green eyes, satin skin and dazzling smile stopped me dead in my tracks. You graciously accepted the spinach leaves, lightly touched your left hand on my sleeve and mouthed a breathless thank you.

You began pushing your fully stocked cart away and I was like a mastodon trapped in the La Brea tar pits. My reaction to your departure was like molasses in a cryogenic state I was letting you get away! Then I remembered the checkout lines being stacked five or six shoppers deep upon my arrival. I had time!

I had dinner guests arriving in a few hours, so I frantically surged forward to complete my gazpacho soup safari. I rounded the last aisle before the checkout and my heart sank like the Bismarck. The cashiers had opened two additional registers! I quickly scanned the remaining lines and you were gone! I unceremoniously tossed my plastic basket aside and raced for the exit. I feverishly checked the parking lot and both ways on Boylston Street. Nothing. You were gone!

I was wearing a striped button-down shirt with an argyle sweater vest, charcoal cargo pants and a pair of tan Birkenstock sandals. You were wearing a flowing mid-length maroon skirt, black "Misfits" T-shirt, leather biker jacket and Doc Marten boots. If this is you or you know this beautiful creature, please contact me!

rockie horoscope

SAGITTARIUS NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

You could be heading for your first full-blown outing of the year on the day when the Sagittarius sun squares your Jupiter ruler and you realize what your next move has to be. For some, the "Eureka!" moment concerns your expanding career; for others, your reputation and the legacy you want to leave to your family. What happens around the 10th could be particularly significant, since those events may be a testament both to your maturation over the past 12 years as well as the metamorphosis Pluto recently put you through.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Eventually it happens to every sign, but this winter it's your turn. Mercury enters Capricorn on the 3rd, then advances slowly for the next two weeks until it stops entirely and turns retrograde on Dec. 17. For the next three weeks Mercury works its way back through Capricorn, crosses the cusp and finally goes direct on Jan. 6 at 26 Sag. Then, ever so slowly, the Messenger picks up speed, reenters Capricorn on January 14 and on the 26th, returns to the degree, 13, at which it flipped six weeks before. How about taking that slow boat to China?

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Romance, right now, might be tricky, especially if you're getting unsolicited advice from friends. Could they possibly have their own agendas? Too much talk and not nearly enough sugar may harden even the softest, most sentimental heart. Opt instead for tried-and-true remedies: flowers, candy and music for the object of your affection, happy hour with your pals. On a more professional note, now would be a good time to connect with folks who can promote your career skills and spread your good name.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Although Mercury doesn't rule your sun sign, it does affect your family and married life, your fourth and seventh astrological houses. Get some idea about the upcoming Christmas–New Year's holiday, when Mercury will be retrograde, by reading the Gemini and Virgo forecasts. While we're in solar Sagittarius, your mind tends to encompass the big picture, aim for the higher truth and seek out a painless escape from the ordinary. Daydreaming usually works, and so can shopping online for those picky relatives.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Whatever has been incubating in your unconscious since your Mars ruler entered Pisces in June is about to burst out into your scene. Although Mars will only be in Aries from Dec. 16 until Groundhog Day, the impact the Warrior can make on your looks and your self-esteem can be tremendous. If you're considering eye surgery, dental work or even a run-of-the-mill makeover, schedule it for that period. Until then, investigate ways of keeping in touch with a wide audience of knowledgeable folks; they'll be your personal power grid.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Besides wondering what they're buying you for Christmas, turn your attention for the next few days on other people's money. While your Venus ruler is in prudent Capricorn, you can concentrate like nobody's business on somebody else's business. Efficiency will be your middle name, and propriety your calling card. Next week, when prosperous, protective Jupiter favors Venus, you'll be rewarded for your efforts, no matter how meager they are. Then you can celebrate like the party animal you aspire to be.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

What you think about, your approach to a problem, even your position in a debate can change since your Mercury ruler entered Capricorn on the 2nd. Instead of contemplating the philosophical implications of an idea or how it'll improve your life, you'll be more concerned with its implementation. What works suddenly becomes what's best. So while your interests may narrow down to a precious few, don't forget that they are precious. Also remember that significant progress can be made before Mercury goes retrograde from the 17th until Jan. 6.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Despite having more social obligations—popular Venus in your Capricorn complement tends to draw you out of your shell—the Crab can still clear time to enjoy personal pleasures, i.e., the pursuits that you alone find entertaining and recreational. Although there might not be a higher goal or ethical imperative attached to whatever pastime gets you off, be thankful that it does accomplish its purpose. You're also poised, if need be, to get a lot of work done over the next two weeks without much stress or strain.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

For the good of the house, for the good of the family, do it. No matter what it costs—and while your sun ruler is under pressure from expansive Jupiter, it will be expensive—you won't be happy until you meet the challenge. Luckily, because Jupiter is in your Virgo house of values, the expenditure will be in good taste and will improve whatever situation you're trying to correct. The loopy relative, the leaky faucet; it hardly matters where the problem lies. You're in the proper mood for rescue and reconstruction.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Read for Gemini. Any information pertinent to Mercury, that sign's ruling planet, applies to you, too. Although the Messenger will be retrograde from Dec. 17 until Jan. 6, turning this Christmas into the holiday from airport hell, all is not lost. Firm up your reservations well beforehand, and you can be fairly confident that you'll be able to come and go more or less as planned. If you got through the total solar eclipse and Thanksgiving (with its destructive Mars-Pluto square) OK, then December should be a breeze.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Wrapped in a cloak of family loyalty and respect for tradition, the occasionally ruthless Libra may operate this week with impunity. Such is often the case when your Venus ruler runs into stiff opposition from stern Saturn, the planet overseeing frustration and failure. If things aren't going your way, if time is not on your side, then pull whatever strings you can lay your hands on. Librans are basically fair-minded, although they've been known to tip the scales when the situation demands it, when someone special will be very grateful.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Try to remember that, astrologically speaking, the outside world doesn't have much influence on your actions this holiday season. You might go through the motions of making money, but you'll be more interested in expressing yourself creatively and showing your loved ones a good time. Carpe diem, because once Mercury flips into retrograde on the 17th, details and delays will be a continuing annoyance. At the same time, your Mars co-ruler shifts out of idealistic Pisces into aggressive Aries, and your mood changes accordingly.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At Steppin' Out, top: Nicole and Jeff Bellows. Middle row: Brian Latson and Patrick Petty; Marvin and Marque Gilmore. Bottom: Sheldon Lloyd, Ivana Flodl and Darryl Settles.

At the Cat in the Hat party, top row: the party's namesake; Eddie Andelman. Middle: John and Susan Spooner, Amanda and Brendan Frank. Bottom: Mitt and Ann Romney.

ALL THAT JAZZ...

Putting on a tuxedo for a charity gala is no guarantee of a good time, unless, of course, you're attending the 16th annual Steppin' Out fund-raiser for the Dimock Community Health Center.

The World Trade Center was transformed into a multiplex of legendary jazz clubs—Wally's, the Hi-Hat, the Savoy, the Lobby Café—and guests wandered from room to room, enjoying performances by the likes of Walter Beasley, Kilombo Mambo, the Paulo Danay Jazz Quartet, and the Boston Gay Men's Chorus. The headliner, however, was the incomparable Roberta Flack, who killed everyone softly with her songs, and then brought them all to their feet for a thunderous standing ovation after both sets.

It was an everyone-who's-anyone kind of crowd, but among those I spied with my little eye: legal eagle Lani Guinier; prominent Chestnut Hillions Kathy and Richard Taylor; Harvard B-School bigwig Rosabeth Moss-Kanter; unofficial mayor of Cambridge Marvin Gilmore, with his son, Marque, who lives in London; Newbury Street hipster honcho Patrick Petty; Boston Police teddy bear Brian Latson; Bob the Chef's proprietor Darryl Settles; the ubiquitous Sheldon Lloyd squiring the ridiculously pretty Ivana Flodl; Boston Globe VP Scott Meyer and his spectacular wife, Andrea; Meyer's colleague, Aisha Saunders, with her eminent husband, attorney Kirk P. Jackson; and so on and so forth.

As if all that weren't entertaining enough, there was the chance to stand between the two escalators and socialize, which is the only thing some people ended up doing.

"I've been coming to this party for years," confessed one, "and by the time I say hello to everybody, it's time to go home."

SOCIAL HABITS OF HIGHLY SUCCESSFUL PEOPLE...

If aliens had landed at the Festival of Lights gala to benefit the Young Professionals of the Boston Public Library Foundation, they might have left with the impression that the BPL is the most happening spot in Boston on a Friday night.

All the bright young things were there, among them: co-chairs Alec Stern, Lee Ostrowski and Heather Earl; uber-philanthropists Paul and Kelley Verrochi; haute couture entrepreneur Leslee Shupe of Serenella; salt-stained sailors Tom Zaulli and Steve Woolfson, with the latter's babe-a-licious main squeeze, Lisa Rebello; loft-dwelling fabulons Sarah and Jonathan Koerner; brunette firecracker Siobhan McCourt; curvaceous tech cutie Kiki Mills; Boston's answer to Dean Martin, Caesar Belbel; Boston's answer to Jimmy Stewart, Peter Creighton; former Houghton Mifflin chief Nader Darehshori; BPL head Bernie Margolis; and others too numerous to mention but every bit as glittery.

The interesting mix of young marrieds, trustafarians, single upper-yuppies and pre-facelift socialites made for much witty banter, like the following exchange between a handsome lawyer who has houses in Brookline and Martha's Vineyard, and the attractive blonde who refused to give him her number:

"I guess two houses isn't enough for you. You want four."

"Hell, I'd date a grad student," she shot back, "I just say things like that to get rid of guys like you."

The party's snarkiest comment, however, came from a woman who greeted a friend with kisses on each cheek and said, "I haven't had enough cocktails to deal with you yet."

ALL THAT AND A BAG OF POPCORN...

If you couldn't immediately figure out which holiday blockbuster was being screened upon arrival at the gala reception for the Joey O'Donnell Film Premiere, to benefit the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation's Joey Fund, you probably flunked out of kindergarten.

Guests entering the Atrium Mall in Chestnut Hill were confronted by a sea of volunteers, waiters and bartenders, all wearing the unmistakable red and white striped stovepipe hat made famous by Dr. Seuss' most obstreperous and subversive feline.

"I guess we're seeing The Cat in the Hat," ventured one guest.

"I'd be a little scared if we weren't," said another.

"I'm going to have to sit through it again with my kids," said a third.

At the pre-screening party, there were copious quantities of food by restaurants like Olive's, Sonsie, the Capital Grille and Legal Sea Foods, while the cocktails flowed free and easy and assorted bigshots and billionaires grazed and guzzled among the mall's three marble floors.

Present and accounted for: top dog Mitt Romney and his wife, Ann; the evening's hosts concessions mogul Joe O'Donnell and his wife, Kathy (whose son's death from cystic fibrosis gave rise to the charity); retired financial titan Jack Sidell (who timed his arrival and departure around the kickoff of the Patriots game); broadcasting giant Eddie Andelman (looking tan and svelte) with his three sons, David, Dan and Michael; sports journalism scion Sean McDonough; real estate mogul Steve Karp and his wonderful wife, Jill; Back Bay party pair Jeff and Christine McCormick; stockbroker-to-the-stars John Spooner and his utterly charming other half, Susan; their daughter and son-in-law, Amanda and Brendan Frank; and some kids who couldn't resist touching the ice sculptures to see if they were, in fact, cold and wet.

At 8:30, everyone grabbed a goody-bag stuffed with candy and Universal Studios tie-in merchandise and high-tailed it over to the Chestnut Hill Cinema for the screening, and for the next five days they all enjoyed bragging rights about having already seen the biggest blockbuster of the holiday season before anybody else. IB

FROM THE EDITOR

ON TO '04

It was a warm day in early October when we met up with the fun-loving Coors Twins, Diane and Elaine Klimaszewski, but they had no trouble getting into the holiday spirit as we showered them with confetti for this issue's New Year's–themed cover. You can see more of the lovely Worcester natives in the fashion section ("Twice as Nice") of this issue, which takes us out of the old year and into the new.

If you're reading the magazine early in its three-week life and haven't yet finished your holiday shopping, Amy MacMillan's look at some talented local jewelry makers ("All That Glitters") may spark a few last-minute gift ideas. These artists' studios are worth looking into any time of year for unique, handmade pieces you won't find in a department store.

Somerville's annual trolley tour past lights-bedecked houses offers the chance to see sparkly things of a different kind, and in "Touring the Lights Fantastic," Julie Suratt explores how one man carries on the decorating tradition his father started 45 years ago.

Safe travels and happy holidays!

LOST IN TRANSLATION

I got a good laugh out of Ezra's last column, "The Host with the Least" (Dec. 3). Or at least I was laughing until I mentioned part of it to a good friend and coworker of mine, who happens to be Japanese. When I asked her what the Japanese phrase Ezra used in the article meant she freaked out! She informed me that his translation is inaccurate and that the words are actually extremely vulgar slang terms for the male and female genitalia. I enjoy Ezra's writing very much—I just think he should check his terminology next time. He got me in a lot of mierda for that one!

GIVE IT AWAY NOW

Kudos to the IMPROPER for the article "Creative Charity" (Dec. 3). This time of year, I feel much better about donating actual things of use than just writing another check. Julie Suratt's clear report of who needs what makes this job easier for all of us. I only wish I'd had this information when I moved to Colorado last year—instead of watching people sift through everything that I ended up leaving on the curb. Thanks for helping us help others.

—CASSIE WICKES
Denver, Colo.

I was pleased to see an article concerning ways to give back this season ("Creative Charity") but saddened to have been left off the list.

Boomerangs is a chain of resale stores wholly owned and operated by AIDS Action Committee. Though AIDS Action was mentioned in your article, our hub for "creative giving" was not. Boomerangs accepts everything from clothes to cars to cheese pins and Christmas ornaments. We also strive to keep our costs low, allowing us to give back a lion's share of the profits to the AAC.

With our recent addition of a Boomerangs in Brighton Center, we plan to provide a new experience in thrift-store shopping. Boomerangs is in Brighton at 298 Washington St. and in Jamaica Plain at 716 Centre St.

JIM H'S JOE V'S

Since closing G Lounge in June 2000, Jim Hamelburg has been itching to open a restaurant that was the "complete antithesis" of the former night club—as he says, "a place where you go to relax, eat and share a nice bottle of wine...not get drunk and dance on the bar" (activities that were known to happen at the Leather District nightspot). He found the ideal setting at the South End's On the Park, which he purchased and renovated to create Joe V's, a casual and cozy boîte on the corner of Shawmut Avenue and Union Park. Hamelburg describes it as a "Franklin Cafe–type of restaurant that serves really good food at reasonable prices."

The lunch and dinner menu focuses on pasta dishes, like the lobster ravioli with vodka cream sauce, as well as thin-crust pizza, which Hamelburg raves about. "We didn't settle on the recipe until a week before opening," he says. "We were making pizzas—all with different crusts—until we found the right combination." The crunchy crust is topped with a zesty plum tomato– and–basil sauce, plus a choice of spicy sausage, barbecued pork or goat cheese, among others. But Hamelburg's favorite is the tomato and basil—"I'm vanilla...a simple guy with simple tastes." The decor matches that philosophy as well, with lots of blond wood, floor-to-ceiling windows and seating for 37. If the staff looks vaguely familiar, it's because many hail from the old G Lounge.

As for the name, Hamelburg decided on "Joe's" after a visit to a cool bar in New York with the same name. Then he added the V in honor of his bartending friend Joe V of West Street Grill. "Now everyone thinks he owns it," he says with a laugh.

Weekend brunch is also available at Joe V's, with staples like French toast, eggs Benedict and waffles joining pizza and pasta on the menu. 315 Shawmut Ave., Boston (617-338-5638). —E.H. and J.S.

STOVETOP STUFFING

You Tellem...Memo to Nomar's agent, Arn Tellem: There are no sacred cows in the Red Sox clubhouse these days, and the big-contract heyday of 2000 is as dead as our Toys.com stock. So when you're talking about $60 million over four years in a market where Miguel Tejada can be had for $8 million per year, don't be surprised when you hear that John Henry was seen sharing a pu-pu platter with A-Rod. We love Nomar, but one gets the idea that Theo Epstein would trade himself and an unborn child to be named later if he thought it would upgrade next year's team. Just something to keep in mind, Arn.

On the opposite side of the greedy-agent coin, we have newly acquired pitching ace Curt Schilling, a man who—horrors!—represents himself and says that any money he makes at this point is just more money he can't spend anyway. Schilling immediately donated $500,000 to the Jimmy Fund upon signing with the Sox. If he pitches well, that would be icing on the cake.

As we go to press, the A-Rod–for–Manny deal is up in the air and we're no closer to closer Keith Foulke. But even if the rest of the winter doesn't produce another Schilling-level deal, the 2004 Sox are looking better than the team that came so close to the World Series (and the most obvious reason for that disappointment has been addressed by the hiring of new manager Terry Francona).

Speaking of teams that look better than their predecessors, dare we mention a certain team in Foxboro...

—Ezra Dyer

WISHFUL THINKING

It's that time again: the season of giving, peace on Earth and goodwill toward men. Yeah, yeah. We all know what's really important here: presents. Like a 50-inch Pioneer high-definition plasma-screen TV, a diamond-encrusted Cellini Rolex or an end to world hunger. Here's what a few local celebs had on their holiday wish lists.

Jodi Applegate, Fox25 Morning News co-host:
I want a weekend at a spa. The self-indulgent kind...not the spartan health-nazi kind.

Ming Tsai, chef/owner Blue Ginger, cookbook author of Simply Ming:
I would like world peace. Seriously. I'm not sure where you can buy that, though. I need to get the next-generation PDA, cell phone, laptop, BlackBerry combo that can also take pictures and play DVDs. It's going to be out there soon. I also want another huge snowstorm the day after I get to Salt Lake City to go skiing in January. And the last thing: I have two little kids who've recently been sick with the flu. I hope Christmas brings us a consistently healthy household.

Kelly Malone, Mix 98.5 morning show co-host:
Since the position hasn't been permanently filled, for Christmas I'd like to be Adam Vinatieri's new ball holder.

Alex Beam, Boston Globe columnist:
What I want for Christmas: An Oscar for Billy Bob Thornton's depiction of Mr. Claus in Bad Santa. A vast upturn in newspaper advertising revenue that would allow all writers with more than 10 days' experience at the Boston Globe to retire on Cyprus. A Supreme Court ruling freezing the number of U.S. "bloggers" at 150, ranks to be determined by lottery. As always: no books, no sweaters, no fleece. Lastly—no, not world peace—but a modicum of inner peace for them that needs it, and I think we know who we are.

Susie Castillo, Miss USA 2003:
I need a car. I'm desperate. I think this is the first year Miss USA hasn't gotten a car. I'd also like Carrie Bradshaw from Sex and the City's shoe wardrobe. And this whole year has been wonderful, but the one thing I don't get to do is spend time with my family. That's the number one thing this Christmas. All that and a partridge in a pear tree.

MINI MEXICAN

Olé on the Go...From the proprietors of Arlington's Olé Mexican Grill comes Andale, a smaller, faster version of its suburban forerunner. The Financial District Mexican takeout spot, which opened mid-December, serves up tamales, burritos and enchiladas for 9-to-5ers on the go. Co-owner Ricardo Ramos and his partner, Armida Amor, offer favorites from the original Olé (not to be confused with the one in Inman Square), like chicken, pork, chorizo or vegetable burritos—at a much faster pace. 125 Summer St., Boston (617-732-2820). Mon.-Fri., 10 am-4 pm.

The folks from Olé in Arlington have opened Andale.

Casual Encounter...As promised, the barkeeps behind the White Horse Tavern and the two Last Drops have reopened their Brighton spot formerly occupied by the Elbow Room. According to owner Doug Bacon, the restaurant, which closed in early June, "just didn't do well enough." His new venture, Harry's Bar and Grill, opened mid-December, and is more of a friendly, neighborhood pub than a night spot. "It's beer instead of martinis," says Bacon. "Burgers and wings instead of swordfish and risotto." 1430 Comm. Ave., Brighton (617-738-9990).

Fine Dining...Kudos to Michael Schlow and company at Via Matta. GQ's notoriously finicky food critic, Alan Richman, ranked the Park Square eatery fourth in his "Top Ten Restaurants at the Top of Their Game" in the December issue. Richman specifically praised Schlow's crispy polpette meatballs. He also cited Jamaica Plain's Arbor as one of the nation's top three newcomers not to be missed.

Pho Redux...Fans of South End hot spot Pho Republique will be happy to hear that the chic Vietnamese eatery has announced plans to open a sibling venture in Cambridge. Kowtow Lounge is moving into the former digs of Giuseppe's (née Metro, née Cottonwood Cafe) in Porter Square in March. Fans of Pho's scenester vibe can expect the same stylish atmosphere at Kowtow, plus a few extras like dim sum carts, whole fish, a more extensive creative cocktail list and a private function room.

Black Goose Down...A new restaurant is slated to top Beacon Hill in late January. A 1920s-themed (red velvet seats, mahogany walls, sidecars and Manhattans) establishment called Scollay Square is moving into the former Black Goose. Co-owner Brad Dalbeck describes his venture as "upscale but casual American comfort food" that "falls somewhere between the Federalist, No. 9 Park and the Beantown Pub." Executive chef/co-owner Chris Damian will be whipping up seared sea scallops with Maine crab orzo and roasted asparagus and blue cheese–crusted lamb rack. 21 Beacon St., Boston (617-742-4900).—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

TOPPING OFF

Like ice, snow and sub-zero conditions in general, hats are a matter of course during Boston winters. But keep in mind that cold weather is no excuse to sacrifice fashion to function. Boston hat designer Marie Galvin has been creating stylish lids for the past decade and has recently caught the eye of celebs and designers worldwide. Her latest collection includes styles that will keep you cozy and cute all season long. Two of my favorites are a modern Daisy Buchanan–style hat with ear flaps and a detachable flower (pin it on your coat for a little flair), and a soft cap (almost like a hood) with an even bigger flower. Both come in wool, corduroy and polar fleece combinations, and nearly every color of the rainbow. Prices range from $66-$129. Available at Turtle, 619 Tremont St., Boston (617-266-2610). www.galvinizedhats.com.

Discount Deal...A new discount deal for Bostonians and their visiting friends and relatives offers tons of opportunities to tour the town on the cheap. Or cheaper. The Go Boston Card is available in 1-, 2-, 3- and 5-day increments and offers free admission to 31 of the city's top attractions and $1,000 in discounts. Available at Go BostonCard.com or at the Grayline Tour office in the City Transportation Building, 16 S. Charles St., Boston.

Latin Connection...The Latino arts community has put itself on the map with the opening of the Center for Latino Arts. After a year of hard work, the Inquilinos Boricuas en Acci's project celebrated the opening of its new building with a ribbon-cutting ceremony on Nov. 20 with Mayor Tom Menino. The three-floor structure (originally All Saints Lutheran Church's parish house) is adjacent to the Jorge Hernandez Cultural Center and features a gallery, stage, and art and dance studios. Program director Sabrina Aviles promises the center will feature art and programs that have "a Latino twist and offer a sense of empowerment and identity." She hopes to fill the house with artists-in-residence, theater, ceramics, dance programs and music. 85 West Newton St., Boston (617-927-1730).

Mayor Menino christens the Center for Latino Arts.

Warming Up...There's at least one good thing about the onset of cold weather (besides snow days, that is): the Colonnade Hotel's Frosty Fridays promotion. Through March 29, guests who make a reservation for Saturday night (at a discounted rate of $229) pay the temperature last read by the National Weather Service at 5 pm for Friday night's stay. In other words, if it's a chilly 20 degrees, your rate is $20 for the night. And if the temp drops below zero, it's on the house. The Frosty Fridays deal includes a double-occupancy room and a choice between two tickets to an Old Town Trolley Tour or skating at the Frog Pond—two outdoor activities whose appeal could be limited when rates are lowest.

Double the 'Do...The majority of fine hair salons in town have been concentrated neatly in a row on Newbury Street. Claire Torpey is helping to expand the territory with her new boutique, Mayfair on the Hill, on West Cedar Street in Beacon Hill. Torpey, a British expat, got her start on London's Regent Street and has been working on the South Shore for a number of years. Even though there are a few salons on Charles Street, none claim coloring as their specialty, as Mayfair does. "I just thought there was a need for a salon that does lots of coloring in Beacon Hill," says Torpey. "I wanted to open something that was chic but rich with nice quality." Just across the Public Garden, 12-year hair styling veteran Amad Saab opened Amaci Salon in mid-December. Saab left Comm. Ave.'s Leeba to open his own joint in Park Square. Straightening, coloring, facials and waxing are among Amaci's specialities. Mayfair on the Hill, 81A West Cedar St., Boston (617-742-6662); Amaci, 230 Stuart St., Boston (617-292-0202).

Taxicab Revolutions...A local company is turning over a new green leaf in livery. Revo-T operates two Toyota Prius hybrids (a cross between a gasoline-powered car and an electric car) on a circuit to and from Logan Airport. Founder Seth Riney says he got the idea about a year ago. "The technology is here, and it's not that much more expensive, so why shouldn't we use it?," he asks. Revo-T (short for revolutionary transportation) has been up and running since September with cars out of Newton and Cambridge. Of course the Prius' super-low emissions rates and unheard of gas efficiency aren't without their price. Riney reports that the average ride costs about a third more than a taxi, and while tipping is accepted, it's not expected. Revo-T requests that reservations be made 48 hours in advance, although it provides service in the Boston metro area with as little as eight hours' notice. (617-872-1573). www.revot.com.—E.H., J.S. & J.I.

BY EZRA DYER

THE FAM DAMILY

It's a long haul when the Dyers spend more than 10 hours in a minivan

After driving down to New York with my brother and parents over Thanksgiving weekend, I have newfound understanding of my parents' longstanding aversion to road trips: Put four people who know how to push each other's annoyance buttons in a metal box for five hours, add the highway's odd combination of boredom and stress, and by the time you arrive at your destination you're fantasizing about pulling a Thelma and Louise off the nearest precipice.

At least I had the best possible vehicle for the job, having blagged a Toyota Sienna minivan. I feel about minivans the same way I feel about prostate exams—I'm not ready for one yet, and even when I do need one I'm going to avoid it. But the Sienna figured to have enough space that the various occupants would be out of strangling distance from one another, and there was a DVD player in back so the passengers could watch the governor of California battle a hot female robot while I, as driver, had an exciting widescreen view of brake lights.

The most important difference between my family and I, from a road-trip perspective, is the fact that they all smoke. Since I wouldn't let them smoke in the car, this ratcheted up the tension level considerably. Their nicotine breaks were structured around my bathroom breaks, which is probably one reason my mother offered me water roughly every 30 seconds. "Here, want some water?" she'd ask, shoving her unwieldy gallon jug in my face. When I declined on the grounds of saturation, she'd turn around and satisfy her compulsion to give someone some water by offering it to George, who, being a dog, lacked the ability to tell her that he was all set with that.

I tried to avoid stopping too often, because every time I did it turned into a half-hour project of smoking, buying junk food and water, and trying to get George to go to the bathroom so he'd stop farting in the car (although that may have eliminated someone's alibi). At one such stop, at a Mobil station somewhere near the taint of New England that is New Haven, Conn., I was cornered by a local TV news crew doing the obligatory "Is this Thanksgiving traffic bad or what?" story. I was asked on camera how I was dealing with the traffic. Later on, as I pulled out onto I-95, I thought of plenty of things I should have said:

"Well, Chet, I figured I'd pull over right here and poke my eyes out with a sharpened Slim Jim, because that would be more fun than sitting in this traffic."

Or, "Ain't this one o' them rest areas where a fella can get some servicin', if you know what I mean? You's purdy."

Instead I said something stupid about needing beef jerky. Whatever I said, I'm just glad the Dyer family trip to New York is getting the intense media coverage it deserves.

I may not have been able to do anything about the traffic or mysterious in-car odors, but as driver, I had absolute control of the radio. For the most part everyone ignored my musical selections and my constant channel-changing, but my father and I did find unlikely common musical ground when the Biz Markie song "Pickin' Boogers" came on. It turns out my dad and I both think that raps about boogers are hilarious. My mom and my brother, however, didn't seem to share our opinion that lines like "playin' ball in the gym, I put boogers on the basketball and pass it to him" are high comedy.

> MY FAMILY'S NICOTINE BREAKS WERE STRUCTURED AROUND MY BATHROOM BREAKS, WHICH IS PROBABLY WHY MY MOTHER OFFERED ME WATER EVERY 30 SECONDS.

In between smoke breaks and long stretches of silence we managed to pack in lots of bickering, as I mentioned. But bickering is better than sexual innuendo, at least when the innuendo is between your parents. They were sitting in back watching Old School when it got to the part where Will Farrell comes out with an inflatable woman and asks if he should dress her as a nurse or a cheerleader. This prompted my mom to ask my dad, "Do you like the nurse or the cheerleader?" This may have been slightly (but only slightly) less disturbing if my mom wasn't a nurse. I told them to stop that right away or I was getting out and running into the woods to see if it wasn't too late to be raised by wolves.

Hey you two: get a room. And a plane ticket. iB

Soroff ON

CASEY AFFLECK

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Casey Affleck, 28, was born in Falmouth and raised in Cambridge, the son of Chris, who works in the Cambridge school system, and Tim, a former actor who now works at a treatment center for alcohol and drug abusers. His older brother is mega-celebrity Ben, with whom he starred in the movie Good Will Hunting. Casey landed his first real acting job at age 12, playing Kevin Bacon's little brother in the PBS production Lemon Sky. When he was 15, he played a young Robert Kennedy in the miniseries The Kennedys of Massachusetts. After finishing high school, he moved to California and landed a major role opposite Nicole Kidman in Gus Van Sant's To Die For. When that film wrapped, he enrolled at Columbia University, where he studied physics before leaving to devote more time to acting. His film credits include 200 Cigarettes, Hamlet, Desert Blue, Chasing Amy and Race the Sun. A committed vegan and animal rights activist, he lives in New York but spoke to Jonathan Soroff at a Boston fund-raiser for Farm Sanctuary, a grassroots organization opposed to factory farming.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, how do I look?
Casey Affleck: You look, ahh...you're an attractive man. I wouldn't feel bad if I were you.
JS: Thanks. So is that what you're wearing?
CA: Right this minute? Yeah. How do I look?
JS: Fabulous. So you're a vegan, but every fan site I looked at says your favorite food is orange peel chicken.
CA: That is something someone made up, as happens all the time in the media, as I'm sure you know, and as I'm sure you've been responsible for yourself.
JS: Absolutely. I'm going to make up things about you too. When was the last time you ate meat?
CA: I was 18, I think.
JS: So you're against factory farming. Does that mean you believe there's a moral absolute about eating another creature? Or is free-range chicken OK? Or say, a duck I hunted myself?
CA: Not in my opinion. I wouldn't want to shoot a duck or eat a free-range chicken. I don't totally trust the restrictions. When they say free-range, does that mean they have five inches of space? I don't know.
JS: What one thing made you take the leap to veganism?
CA: It was gradual. I stopped eating dairy because I found that it made me feel better. I started to find out a bit about factory farming, which turned me off entirely on meat. I ate fish for a while, and then I finally saw the light. It happened over the span of about three years.
JS: Favorite vegan recipe?
CA: These days, I've been eating a lot of tofu salad sandwiches. Tofu crumbled up, with some celery, onion, tomato, salt and pepper. It's delicious.

> THERE ARE A MILLION THINGS I WANT TO DO, BUT I DON'T WANT TO SAY BECAUSE I'M NERVOUS I'LL NEVER DO THEM. I'LL BE DOING AN INTERVIEW 10 YEARS FROM NOW, AND SOMEONE WILL SAY, "SO, YOU WANTED TO BE PRESIDENT, HUH? JACKASS."

JS: If cows could eat us, do you think they would?
CA: Probably not. Although they have a lot to be angry about.
JS: What's the one thing you'd say to people to get them to stop eating animals?
CA: There's more than one. It's bad for you. It's bad for the environment. It's cruel. It's bad karma. If I showed you how any one thing got to your plate, that would be convincing enough.
JS: You just mentioned karma. What were you in a previous lifetime?
CA: A little bit better of an actor.
JS: OK, where do you stand on sex with farm animals?
CA: I've only ever had sex with rabbits, so I can't really speak to farm animals.
JS: What's your take on PETA, or the animal rights activists who do stuff like destroy medical labs?
CA: Honestly? I think they do good work. I think that what's happening is so awful that they're doing something necessary. As far as I know, they've never hurt human beings or animals, and they raise awareness. People who wear fur coats and get paint on them? F--- 'em. It may not be pleasant, but they've contributed to something so awful that I feel like it's justified.
JS: Tell me you don't miss McDonald's food.
CA: No, I never really liked it. But I do love seeing signs for the McVeggie Burger, or whatever. They're finally getting a clue. Fast food is the next tobacco industry. They've plagued this country for too long.
JS: You studied physics at Columbia?
CA: Astronomy, yeah, but I left before I got my degree, and I'm an idiot, so I probably wouldn't have graduated. I snuck in and I dropped out.
JS: Do you think we'll see cold fusion in our lifetime?
CA: Yeah.
JS: So were you the inspiration for the mathematical and scientific genius in Good Will Hunting?
CA: [Laughs.] No, Matt was the inspiration for that. It was a big huge fantasy of his, about being a genius.
JS: Is acting it for you?
CA: There are a million things I want to do, but I don't want to say because I'm nervous I'll never do them. I'll be doing an interview 10 years from now, and someone will say, "So, you wanted to be president, huh? Jackass."
JS: Favorite thing about acting?
CA: The attention.
JS: Least favorite?
CA: The attention.
JS: Does acting come from a place of need?
CA: For me it does, because I know that if I haven't worked for six months, I need to do something.
JS: Biggest lie you ever told for an acting job?
CA: I once claimed to speak fluent Italian because it was an Italian-speaking role, with subtitles. I was pretty quickly found out. But I still think I could've done a good job.
JS: One role you wish you never did?
CA: Every single one. I can't watch myself. I think that I suck. For me, it's hard to see something I've done and not be critical. Then there are the things I wish I'd done but didn't.
JS: But you're big in Japan, right?
CA: [Laughs.] I don't know about that. For some reason, 200 Cigarettes did very well over there. They just loved it.
JS: Have you done any cheesy Japanese TV commercials? That's where the cash is.
CA: I think that is where the cash is, but I don't think they're hard up for actors to come over and help sell their products.
JS: Speaking of products, what kind of hair products do you use?
CA: Palm sweat.
JS: I thought you'd say some cruelty-free thing. When you buy stuff at a pharmacy, do you look for that "No Animal Testing" label?
CA: Definitely. Always.
JS: Any phobias?
CA: Interviews. Waking up. Going to sleep.
JS: Most inexplicable pop culture phenomenon?
CA: Well, I'd say The Bachelor, except I love it, and I completely understand it, and I think it's a brilliant use of television. I never really watched TV until reality shows took over. Sitcoms depressed me. I couldn't watch them. But I like most reality TV.
JS: Last question: Where's Waldo?
CA: Waldo is downstairs waiting for us to come down and have a drink. IB

WHAT DO YOU GET WHEN YOU MIX NEW ENGLAND'S SKI SLOPES, SNOW AND SERIOUS SOCIALIZING? SIZZLING SINGLES ACTIVITY chemistry

Di

If the sheer number of beach-themed movies is any indication, Hollywood seems convinced that romance and true love are mainly to be found someplace warm and sandy.

Not so. Thousands of Bostonians know that if they're looking for amour or just a great workout combined with a rollicking good time, they can also find it in places that are cold and snowy. New England's more than 65 mountains and ski resorts are easy to reach and filled with fit and friendly people who love the outdoors.

"Ski areas are some of the most beautiful places in the world and provide unbelievably romantic settings," says Ace Morin, a 40-something engineer from Watertown who's active in the S-kimos Ski Club in Jackson, N.H. His only complaint? "There are definitely more men than women skiing. I wish it wasn't that way."

Though the odds may favor women, in this part of the country one of the best places to find singles of both sexes is on the slopes. Hurtling yourself down a frozen mountain might not seem the most obvious way to meet Mr. or Ms. Right, but as you'll see, black diamonds could even lead to a diamond of another sort.

"SKIERS ARE IN A VACATION MENTALITY. YOU DON'T NEED A PICKUP LINE— PEOPLE JUST TALK AND FEEL COMFORTABLE."

— PETER ESSELSTYN, CHARLESTOWN

SHARED PASSION

On any given winter weekend, some 150,000 skiers and snowboarders (more than half of them in the 25-to-45 age range, and 60 percent of them male) flock to New England's slopes, according to rough estimates from state ski promotion bureaus and ski areas. And of those snow enthusiasts, 33 percent are single, according to figures provided by SnowSports Industries America (SIA) and the Simmons Market Research Bureau.

What's more, skiers and snowboarders are passionate about their sport, and many skiers say that when looking for romance, finding a partner who shares that interest is a top priority. "I love to ski," says Peter Esselstyn, a single, 39-year-old engineer from Charlestown. "For me, it's defying gravity—a physical challenge that you can spend ungodly amounts of money on. Finding someone who shares your passion is fantastic."

"I used to hibernate in the winter; then a boyfriend introduced me to skiing," says Janie Dretler, an organizational consultant from Somerville. "I started skiing a lot because I met people with the same interests. Skiing really opened up my entire year to being athletic and having fun." She met her husband, Jeff, at Sugarbush in Vermont in 1999, and they were married last year.

"Skiing is my passion, my number one favorite hobby," says Melissa Bell, weekend meteorologist at WBZ. "I wouldn't even think about going out with someone who didn't ski or wasn't willing to learn."

"If the person you're seeing doesn't ski, it creates a little stress when you take off every weekend," says Adam Westaway of Chelmsford, a furniture maker in his late 20s who met Bell last year when both taught skiing at nearby Nashoba in Westford. "It's perfect when they love skiing too."

THE DATING GAME, MOUNTAIN STYLE

Opportunities to meet abound at ski resorts—in a bar, with a ski club, at the lodge, on the lifts, taking group lessons, waiting in line or even tumbling down the trails. Here are some suggestions from the veterans we spoke with:

The chairlift conversation. Talk about three-minute dating. Get on a chairlift with someone who looks appealing to you, and you have just about that amount of time to determine if your first-glance impression is correct and to make an impression yourself. "Riding a chairlift is very social," observes Esselstyn, who has been skiing since he was 3. "You've got a captive audience. It's more awkward not to talk to someone."

Find 'em or leave 'em. Skiing also lends itself to "accidentally" running into (not literally, of course) someone who looks interesting by taking the same trails or arriving at the lift line at the same time. And, conversely, being on the slopes also works well when you want to lose someone. Says the Back Bay's Jen Bennett, a 30-something graphic designer, "You can just ski a little faster and lose them, or ski behind them and head a different way."

Vodka vamps. On-slope encounters aside, bars rank as the most common spot for meeting new people at a ski area (see sidebar, "Best Bars in Ski Country"). A woman who wished to remain anonymous commented that meeting a guy at the Hyde Away, a watering hole near Sugarbush in Waitsfield, Vt., is like shooting fish in a barrel. (An informal poll indicates that this holds true for almost any bar in skidom.) From the guy's vantage point, the approach proves easier. "Skiers are in a vacation mentality," says Esselstyn. "You don't need a pickup line—people just talk and feel comfortable."

Shacking up. Another way skiers meet is through a ski house or ski club. (Most find houses by word-of-mouth—through friends of friends; check out www.eicsl.org or www.bssc.com for information about clubs.) These are affordable ways to have your own place in ski country and a surefire way to make sure you're not sitting home alone when the skiing day is through. Meals are generally communal, weekend parties commonplace, and camaraderie runs rampant.

Everyone had already gone to bed when Jeff Dretler, 40, a Boston lawyer, arrived late on a Friday night as a guest in a friend's ski house near Sugarbush. An avid skier, he had no idea that the next morning he would meet his future bride, but when she appeared at the group breakfast in her pajamas, sparks flew. That it was Valentine's Day weekend—a time when several ski houses host parties—just helped things along. "It was a pretty friendly atmosphere," he says. "We really hit it off." Jeff proposed to Janie three years to the weekend after that fateful meeting, while they skied cross-country on a gloriously sunny day.

Julie Lydon, a 32-year-old public relations consultant from Boston, met her current beau, Jonathan Vinet, a software salesman from York, Maine, at the top of the quad chair on Mount Mansfield in Stowe, Vt., last year. "It wasn't a sparks flying kind of thing," she says, "but I definitely checked him out." After skiing with a group all day, the two met again at a mutual friend's dinner party, and the rest is history. Now sharing the same ski house in Stowe, the couple has already spent one weekend on the slopes this season.

WHERE TO GO

Boston-area skiers have almost too many choices in Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine and Massachusetts alone. Add in the Quebec ski areas—Mont Tremblant, Mont Ste. Anne, Le Massif—and it's hard to know where to start.

If you're a beginner, unless money is no object, it's good to start slowly and make sure this is a sport you're going to enjoy. Pick a nearby ski area. Maybe plan a day trip to a resort within two hours' driving time. If you've never skied before, search the ski areas' Web sites to find the best beginner packages—ones that offer learn-to-ski programs with lift ticket, ski rental and lessons all for one price.

If it's not a sport you fall in love with, though, don't fake it. "Romances between a nonskier and a skier often don't work," says Ace Morin. "Skiing isn't like golf or tennis where it's a couple of hours here and there. It's a whole weekend, week after week, all winter long."

Skiing isn't cheap—hence, the more than 50 percent of skiers with salaries above the national average. Esselstyn figures it costs him at least $100 a day with lift ticket, lodging, meals and libations, and that doesn't include equipment costs.

Hands down, the top singles ski area in New England is Killington in central Vermont—a three-hour drive from Boston. Its legendary access road is lined with rowdy and steamy après-ski bars, most popular with the 20-somethings. Skiers come from everywhere to fly down this beast of the East. The bad news: too many Yankees fans.

Sugarbush and Mad River Glen, in Waitsfield and Warren, Vt., respectively, rank high and are practically a Boston North for the slightly more mature crowd

Clockwise from top left: Eva Merrian takes flight on Mount Mansfield at Stowe Mountain Resort; snowboarding at New Hampshire's Attitash Bear Peak; a skier beneath the K-1 gondola at Killington; sunrise on top of White Cap, one of Sunday River's eight interconnected mountains; snowshoeing in Sugarbush's picturesque Mad River Valley; Mount Snow's main base area

(the 30-somethings who say it's still fun to act like 20-somethings). The nightlife is quieter and concentrated in only a couple of bars. The upside: Down-to-earth people, many of whom own second homes in the Mad River Valley. The skiing here, with glades and many narrow, steep trails, is not for novices.

Just up the road is Stowe, one of the most upscale New England resorts. As the Northeast's original ski village, it has the obligatory white steepled church, rolling snow-covered fields and quaint shops. The skiing is at nearby Mount Mansfield, where both the macho and the meek can find terrain to satisfy them. This is another Boston North, although Stowe attracts many New York and Connecticut skiers. "I can't believe how many people I've met up there that I run into [in Boston]," says Lydon.

The most popular mountains in New Hampshire's Mount Washington Valley are Attitash, in Bartlett, and Wildcat, off Route 16 in Pinkham Notch. Social ski clubs prosper in this cradle of skidom, and the nightlife extends over the valley's three main villages—Jackson, North Conway and Bartlett. Bars range from rowdy country hangouts with loud bands and people to those featuring folk singers and catering to the early-to-bed, superfit cross-country crowd.

Other New Hampshire destinations include Waterville Valley, Loon Mountain and Cannon, all just off I-93, two to three hours north, and filled with day trippers. These spots have plenty of early après-ski action, but limited dining and nighttime activity.

Many dedicated skiers head to Sugarloaf in Carrabassett Valley, Maine, almost the center of the state. It's a five-hour drive from Boston, but the resort, a breathtaking single peak, has top-to-bottom trails and terrain from open snowfields to traditional tree-lined narrow runs, making it unquestionably the best skier's mountain in New England. Its remoteness means lots of locals—a fair share with beards. But they're interspersed with skiers from all over the East who stay for a few days and make their own fun in the small and intimate bars and clubs at the base of the slopes. Immediate après-ski is animated and busy, but all that challenging skiing means late-night activity tapers off quickly.

Maine's Sunday River, another extensive ski area located in Bethel, a four-hour drive from Boston, aspires to be just like Killington and has nearly the same level of challenging slopes. But it can't compete for nightlife, mainly because Sunday River is more spread out. Since it's Maine, you won't find nonstop partying; it's more mellow than that, with brew pubs, heated outdoor swimming pools and quiet inns the preferred places to meet and mingle.

If a long-distance relationship appeals, try Mount Snow in southern Vermont. While relatively close to Boston (a two-hour drive), it attracts corporate types and executives from Connecticut and New York because Mount Snow is a straight shot north for them.

If you're not quite ready to venture that far, think about trying out a local mountain for size. Wachusett—just over an hour outside Boston in Princeton, Mass.—and Nashoba, in Westford, have weekday night skiing and race leagues that attract a large number of dedicated skiers who are, most often, young business professionals. Both also have busy bars slopeside that are popular places on those cold winter nights.

THINK SNOW!

Once skiing enters your life, there's no more dreading the cold. Nor'easters and "storm of the century" predictions start to sound good. For the next four months, skiing and good times will go together, guaranteed. Even if you don't meet your perfect match, you're bound to have more fun than you would hibernating all winter in Boston. "It's the absolute cliché thing," says Julie Lydon, "but if you do what you love and if you're not looking to meet someone, then it happens." IB

"I STARTED SKIING A LOT BECAUSE I MET PEOPLE WITH THE SAME INTERESTS. SKIING REALLY OPENED UP MY ENTIRE YEAR TO BEING ATHLETIC AND HAVING FUN."

BEST BARS IN SKI COUNTRY

Clockwise from top left: Red Parka Pub; Gepetto's; the Rusty Nail; the Wobbly Barn; the Foggy Goggle

An après-ski decision at Killington in Vermont: Get pickled at the Wobbly or wobbly at the Pickle?

Killington, with its nightlife choices stretched out along Killington Road, often tops polls as the ultimate nightlife destination for Eastern skiers. Both the Wobbly Barn Steakhouse and the Pickle Barrel are good places to go for après-ski and late-night dancing to live music—often featuring big-name bands on busy weekends. The Grist Mill is sometimes referred to as "Jurassic Park" because the "more mature" skiers who frequented it in the 1980s are still showing up. Regulars recommend the rum and fruit juice Goombays and say the place rocks on weekends.

The nightlife at Stowe and Mount Snow, also both in Vermont, comes highly recommended. "The Matterhorn (on the mountain road in Stowe) is so much fun—a dive-like bar with the best pizza and healthy sushi options too," says Bostonian Julie Lydon, 32, a marketing consultant. "Saturday après ski always involves a band and group games—it's kind of like a mini spring break every Saturday from 4:30 to 7:30ish." Giving away a "best-kept secret," Lydon recommends the retro-style Stowehof Inn, on Edson Hill Road just outside the village of Stowe, with its classic '70s sunken fireplaces and a downstairs pub surrounded by niche rooms where people play board games. "Very cool place," she says. Other Stowe notables include the Rusty Nail, Mr. Pickwick's at Ye Olde England Inne and Miguel's Stowe Away (all on Mountain Road).

Mount Snow skiers head first to Cuzzins in the resort's base lodge. "It's cult après ski," says Erica Steckler, 29, of Newton. Skiers find it hard to be shy with the DJ encouraging dancing on the tables. The Snow Barn is walking distance from Mount Snow's parking lot and often features up-and-coming bands. The Silo, a converted grain silo on Route 100, tends to attract a younger crowd. It has 10-cent wings from 4 to 6 pm and also features a cigar bar in the basement.

Called the "grand dowager of ski bars" decades ago by the Globe's Tony Chamberlain, the 31-year-old Red Parka Steakhouse & Pub on Route 302 in Glen, N.H., still rates as the top ski bar in Mount Washington Valley (close to Attitash and Wildcat). With live bands or comics, beer in mason jars and a good mixture of locals and "flatlanders"—the Massachusetts skiers who fill the place every weekend—meeting people is easy. Other contenders in "the Valley" include the folksy, quieter Wildcat Tavern on Route 16A in Jackson Village and Tuckerman's Tavern at the New England Inn on Route 16A in Intervale. Overstuffed sofas, fireplaces and the cross-country crowd at the Wildcat and more than 25 beers on tap at Tuckerman's are notable aspects of these hangouts.

If skiing at Sunday River in Bethel, Maine, stop first at the Foggy Goggle in the South Ridge Base Lodge at the base of the mountain. Top spots for later include the Sunday River Brewery or the Matterhorn, both along the Sunday River access road. Further north at Sugarloaf in Carrabassett Valley, Maine, Gepetto's and the Bag and Kettle are recommended for post-ski fun, while for live music and dancing, the Widowmaker Lounge is the choice. All are right in the village at the base of the ski area.

House decorations on the Somerville Illuminations Tour run the gamut from Santa and snowmen to religious themes, like the Carvalhos' manger scene (bottom left).

TOURING THE Lights Fantastic

BY JULIE SURATT PHOTOGRAPHED BY BRIAN SILVERSTEIN

Joseph "Jerry" Carvalho starts sorting through his boxes of Christmas decorations about the same time the rest of us are contemplating our Halloween costumes. On a warm weekend in mid-October, the 51-year-old Somerville resident lugs a giant plywood structure to his front yard and assembles a 12-by-8-foot manger that all but obscures the first floor of the two-family home he shares with his wife, daughter and father.

But before it houses Mary, Joseph and baby Jesus in all their glowing plastic glory, the manger becomes Joe's Meat Market on Halloween night. Lit with fluorescent lights, this scene of mayhem features fake blood splattered on the walls, a guillotine in the corner and a small refrigerator with body parts spilling out. "We had between 800 and 900 kids come by this year," says Carvalho. "There were cops directing traffic on either end of the street."

A week later, Carvalho and his wife, Diane, clear out the manger, and it sits empty for a few weeks until neighbors begin to ask, "Hey Jerry, when're the lights goin' up?" This year in particular, Carvalho feels the pressure.

Carvalho's house is the first stop on the Somerville Arts Council's annual Illuminations Tour, a 45-minute trolley tour of 50 of the most extravagantly decorated houses in the city, including 20 show-stoppers. These are the kind of displays that make you squint from the glare of thousands of tiny lights and dozens of illuminated ornaments—from colossal candy canes, inflated snowmen and animated gingerbread men to Santa's sleigh perched on a rooftop and glowing signs that read "Reindeer Parking."

More than 900 people climb aboard the trolleys to gape at the awesome creations as guides offer interesting tidbits about the neighborhood (for example, Marshmallow Fluff was invented down the block from Carvalho's house on Springfield Street). The tour started seven years ago with eight trips, and now it's up to 24 tours in one night.

What some might dismiss as gaudy, Rachel Strutt, program manager at the Somerville Arts Council, calls folk art—"an artistic expression that often elevates mundane, everyday objects, like a string of lights, for example, to something of exceptional beauty." On a more basic level, the families are "simply carrying on a cultural custom that brings them pleasure and pride," she says.

Holiday displays are also a blending of old and new, says Strutt. In Somerville's lights, especially within the city's significant Italian and Portuguese communities, you'll find a meshing of centuries-old religious tradition—the Catholic crèche—with the modern American "madcap stringing of twinkly lights and inclusion of secular holiday characters like Santa and Snoopy," she says.

"You might find similar displays in Medford or Chelsea, both of which have strong working/middle-class ethnic communities," says Greg Jenkins, the Somerville Arts Council's director. "But you wouldn't find it in the South End, for example."

Carvalho, whose family is Portuguese, says his mother used to set up a small-scale nativity scene in their house every Christmas when he and his brother were kids. Eventually, his dad took the tradition outside. Now 85, his father can't help put up the lights anymore, but he watches from the sidelines, calling out suggestions.

Wearing a down jacket, jeans, workboots and a tan baseball cap, Carvalho has a full day of work ahead of him. A neighbor has donated a bale of hay, left over from Halloween, to line the bottom of the manger, saving Carvalho and his father a drive to a farm. To begin, Carvalho pulls out the 15 or so plastic figurines—from the Three Kings to the shepherd to the cherub angels—stored in his basement. He wipes them off with a damp cloth and plugs them in one at a time. He's had to replace some of the figurines over the years due to dry rot—not an easy task, since he's particular about their facial expressions. He hefts huge cardboard boxes filled with hundreds of light strings to his workbench to check for broken bulbs. "It gets me excited for Christmas, but it's a chore," he admits. Carvalho does the bulk of the work on his own now that his four daughters are grown. Why does he do it? "It's a tradition. People make pilgrimages here to see the lights. And it's really important to my dad," he adds.

After he puts the figures into place, plugging them into giant power strips, he'll line the roof of the manger with fresh evergreen branches and pipe in Christmas carols through speakers located underneath the manger. "It's a full sensory experience—from the scent of the pine and hay, to the sound of the music," says Carvalho. As a last touch, he and his brother project images of a giant Christmas tree and a wreath, respectively, onto the side of each other's houses.

Jerry Carvalho, shown with his granddaughter Amber DaRosa, carries on the decorating tradition that his father started at the family's house 45 years ago.

Carvalho finishes up right before Thanksgiving—a full month after he started. "If I was to do it straight out, working eight-hour days, it would take almost a full week to do the whole thing—48 hours, including all the prep work down cellar." He says his electricity bill goes up between 25 and 30 percent in December. "Working for the electric company, you'd think I'd get a discount," he says with a chuckle.

But he says it's worth it for the joy it brings to passersby. "People throw money into the manger," says Carvalho's wife, Diane. For all his hard work, does he reward himself by keeping the money? No, says Diane with a smile, "We donate it to the local church."

The seventh annual Illuminations Tour takes place on Dec. 20 from 4:30–8:45 pm. Tickets are $10, $5 for children (with proceeds benefiting the Somerville Arts Council's public programs) and can be purchased at McIntyre and Moore Booksellers, 255 Elm St., Somerville. iB

Earrings and pendant (with sterling silver neckwire) made by Michele Mercaldo in 18-karat yellow gold and sterling silver

ALL THAT Glitters

Local jewelry makers offer unique pieces in styles from classic to cheeky

BY AMY MACMILLAN
PHOTOGRAPHED BY ANDREW BRILLIANT

Ask women which accessory they can't live without, and many will reply, without hesitation, jewelry. Which gift a man will always win points for? Same answer. Some jewelry is timeless (grandmother's single strand of pearls), some is nostalgic (that art deco brooch found at the flea market) and some is simply dazzling (the four-carat engagement hardware that someone in the office is flashing around). What we're focusing on here, though, is a different subset: contemporary jewelry that's handmade in Boston. Though you may have to make an appointment to see this work, or keep tabs on the local craft shows and open studios where it is shown, there's lots of interesting, quality jewelry being made by talented Boston artisans and awaiting discovery. Using skills like metal casting and glass blowing, these craftspeople create beautiful pieces from scratch in their own studios. You just might find the next family heirloom.

MICHELE MERCALDO, MICHELE MERCALDO JEWELRY
South End

Platinum, gold, silver. The materials are beautiful but the process of turning them into jewelry is decidedly gritty. Most days of the week, you'll find Michele Mercaldo (Mimi to her friends) in her South End studio casting, soldering, filing, sanding and polishing those metals into some beautiful forms. "I'm here Monday through Thursday doing benchwork, and I do appointments [with clients] on weekends," says Mercaldo.

It's a craft the Cape Cod native has been practicing in Boston's South End for 11 years, and though the work is demanding, Mercaldo says she loves the permanence of the pieces she creates. "All craft materials have their different inherent traits," says Mercaldo, who has a degree in printmaking and sculpture from the Massachusetts College of Art. "Metalworking is difficult to master, but the nice thing is once you make it through the process, it's a very durable, lasting material."

In the showroom attached to her studio, you'll find a wide variety of pieces—everything from affordable silver earrings to pricey platinum and diamond engagement rings—all with Mercaldo's signature look. "Modern and clean, not overembellished," is how Mercaldo describes her style. "You can wear these pieces with jeans or to the office."

Earrings in the form of inverted cone drops are decorated with a simple white or black pearl or an 18-karat gold ball. A white-gold locket is set with nine diamonds and features a magnetic closure. In the rings, earrings and bracelets in Mercaldo's Marriage of Metals line, materials seamlessly blend together—gold earrings in a barrel shape that include an oxidized stripe of sterling silver, for example. Her higher-end line features the Groove band and bracelet, in which a groove runs around the ring with a channel setting of diamonds. A platinum band with diamonds or a "wave" of gold is another option.

Mercaldo also custom-makes rings and wedding bands and can reset a stone for an engagement or commitment ring. "I spend most of my bench time designing and making the higher-end rings," she says.

Locket in 14-karat white gold with nine diamonds with stainless steel and gold neckwire, $4,300

Creating such lasting pieces gives Mercaldo an artist's satisfaction. "I hope that my work does express the time period that I live in more than anything else," she says. "Hopefully this stuff that I make will be passed down to somebody and will bring back this time period. That's the nice thing about making things by hand—things that will last."

Mercaldo's studio and showroom are open by appointment. Visit www.michelemercaldo.com to see more of her work; call 617-350-7909 to arrange an appointment. Prices range from $50 to more than $10,000.

JOYCE ROESSLER, ROESSLER GLASS
South End

Joyce Roessler admires Michele Mercaldo's skill as a metalsmith and considers her a mentor, even though Roessler's chosen material couldn't be more different than Mercaldo's. "Glass encompasses everything for me," says Roessler. "I went to school to be a painter and sculptor. When I started working with glass, I realized it involves painting, dealing with color and light, and all those great things painters love to do."

Still, if you're making glass jewelry, you must also use metal. "I have a pretty sophisticated understanding of glass, but I'm not a metalsmith—I've had to learn to work with metal as something to hold the glass, and to get the two things to work well together," says Roessler. "Mimi Mercaldo has taught me everything I know about metal."

After an apprenticeship at Flat Glass Penco Studios in Louisville, Ky., and more than a decade of owning her own glass shop in Maine where she sold her glass sculptures, Roessler turned to jewelry making when she arrived in Boston in the early '90s. Today, she has a thriving wholesale business and a retail shop in the South End where she sells her jewelry, as well as the glass beads she makes, and teaches jewelry-making classes. The Chappell Gallery on Newbury Street is currently showing some of Roessler's high-end pieces.

Roessler blows all of the glass parts for her jewelry at Diablo Glass and Metal in Mission Hill, where anyone is welcome to visit and observe. Here, Roessler manipulates the glass in its molten state, straight from the furnace, using mouth-blowing and hand tools, as opposed to molds, to shape the glass. Working with an assistant, she forms beads by drawing a strand of hot glass all the way across the studio. The glass tube that forms—sometimes as long as 30 feet—is then cut into slices of varying thickness with a diamond saw. Roessler finishes up the process at her "cold working studio" at her South End shop, where she tumbles (polishes) and solders the jewelry.

Roessler's pieces are playful and vibrant. Some of her necklaces feature curved glass with pearls or simply a bundle of beads delicately dangling off a link chain. Her one-of-a-kind silver neck cuff with a large glass pendant and freshwater pearl is a substantial piece of jewelry. Her glass lariat necklaces were big sellers this past year, she says, and her riveted-bead sterling silver rings are a treat to wear.

"I love the sensuousness of glass," says Roessler. "There's something about the weight of it and the way it warms to the body. It feels great."

Roessler's South End studio and showroom, at 46 Waltham St. Courtyard, are open between 10 am and 6 pm, Monday through Friday, or by appointment. Call 617-426-4705, or visit www.roesslerglass.com. Prices range from $25 to $2,500.

JULIA GROOS, HALO DESIGNS
Fort Point Channel

Julia Groos knew at an early age that she wanted to create jewelry. She bought her first tools and drawing board when she was a teenager growing up in Munich, and went on to a vocational school for glass and jewelry working. "All you do is jewelry—it's very thorough," says Groos of that training. "We had to be precise to a tenth of a millimeter."

After graduating, Groos went to work for a Munich jeweler, and in 1988 she and a friend opened a jewelry and accessories company where she learned how to run her own business. She moved to Boston in 1994 and studied photography, stone carving and computer graphics, as well as some jewelry design, during a year at the School of the Museum of Fine Arts. In 1997, she launched her own jewelry making business, Halo Designs.

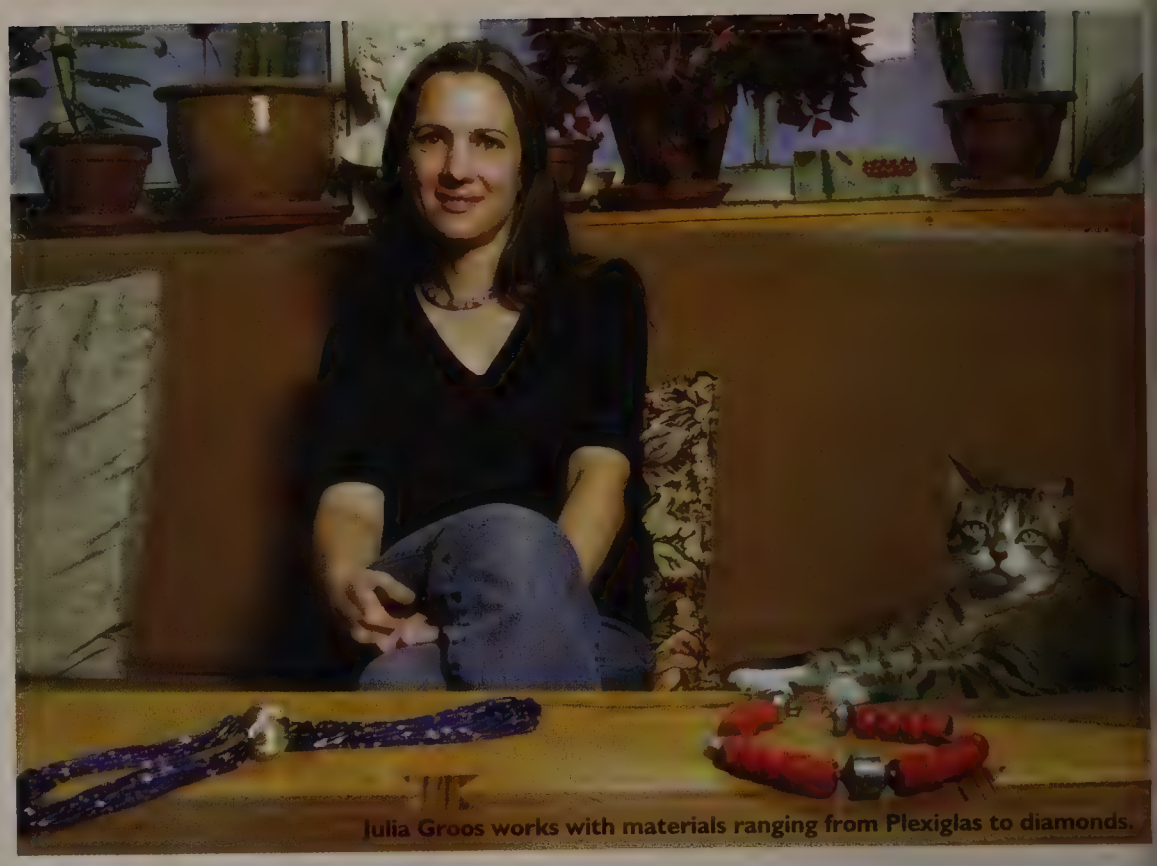
Enter her Fort Point Channel showroom today, and you'll find jewelry that incorporates materials from plastic to diamonds. Perhaps her best-known piece is her Plexiglas bracelet, a cuff in which gold or silver leaf is placed between two layers of transparent Plexiglas in bright shades like blue, green and red. "They are really fun," she says. "The colors of the Plexiglas are what attract me."

"I tend to connect with people looking for more unusual items," Groos says of her customers. She scours gem shows worldwide to find interesting shapes and colors to work with. "I do a lot of one-of-a-kind pieces—I go to gem shows and look for fancy-cut big stones, and I make something special out of them," she says. Halo Designs' latest line, the Rock Me collection, reflects Groos' love of "big jewelry." Several of the rings feature a single gem set on a square shank (the part of the ring that wraps around the finger). A sterling silver choker shows off a chunky rutilated quartz pendant.

Some of her work shows off her interest in mechanical processes. Her interchangeable-parts earrings allow the wearer to slip on different designs. An 18-karat gold ring features a pearl held in place by two rivets that allow the pearl to spin freely. Groos' sterling silver "puzzle rings" include a colorful inlay of Plexiglas and can be worn individually or interlocked to form the wearer's own creation.

"I always have some interesting stuff when you come to my studio," says Groos. "I like to carry a variety."

Groos creates jewelry in a wide price range ($50 to $2,000), including custom work. You can visit her showroom by appointment. For more information, visit www.juliagroos.com.



Julia Groos works with materials ranging from Plexiglas to diamonds.

JENNIFER CHIN
LUSH METALS
Westford

Jennifer Chin creates rings, bracelets, earrings and necklaces almost exclusively in sterling silver. Her work unites the dual themes of nature and machinery—flower buds, pods and berries mix interestingly with geometric shapes and mechanical renderings of gears, chains, nuts and bolts. Some of her pieces are stamped with patterns and textures, while others have decorative scrolls, vines or flowers. Prices range from $20 to $600. www.lushmetals.com. 978-692-8461.

MATTHEW FELDMAN
Cambridge

Matthew Feldman works mostly in yellow, rose and white gold. Influenced by Russian constructivism and Japanese design, his work is uncluttered and incorporates gems discreetly. A pair of gold earrings hangs straight, embellished only with a tiny tsavorite (an African green garnet). Some of his sterling silver and rose gold bracelets feature magnetic closures that make them easy to put on and take off. Prices range from $525 to $15,000. 617-876-1011.

HOLI-dazzle

HOLIDAY LOOKS THAT WILL HAVE THEM SINGING YOUR PRAISES WELL INTO THE NEW YEAR

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE

When I heard that Gordon Espinet, global executive director of makeup artistry for MAC Cosmetics, was at Boston's Saks Fifth Avenue, I ran over to meet him and get the dirt on how we Bostonians can look even more beautiful.

Samantha House: What's the trend in makeup right now?

Gordon Espinet: The trend right now is modern classic. Playing up either eyes or lips while simplifying the other.

SH: What's the one makeup faux pas you see on the street that makes you cringe?

GE: I hate it when women hide behind their makeup. They plaster it on and you can't see who they are.

SH: What's the one MAC lipstick that looks great on everyone?

GE: I love the lipstick "O." It has a pink base with copper overtones. It looks fabulous on literally everyone, and it's not too overpowering.

SH: What's MAC'S best eye shadow in your opinion?

GE: My favorite eye shadow is carbon. It's black, but it can be worn sheer over other colors just to add some depth. It can also be worn alone for a smoky effect.

SH: Do you think that less is more?

GE: I was doing a job where Beyonce was scheduled to perform and she was warming up on stage with no makeup on. She usually wears makeup, so I actually found it refreshing to see her fresh-faced. It's always fun to wear makeup, to reinvent yourself with new shades or new ways to apply it. It really taps into your alter ego. But I think women need to realize that they don't always have to have a lot of makeup on.

tip For that glowing look the movie stars have, use two different color foundations—one for the T zone area as highlight (this one should match your skin) and another for the outer area of your face—(this shade should match your shoulders) and blend well.

On Anya: Espinet accentuates Anya's eyes with a little sparkle, some eyeliner and false lashes. He keeps her lip color subtle and adds a natural blush that's just right for her skin tone.

tip When using glitter on your eyes, remove the pieces that have fallen onto your face with a piece of tape to keep a polished and neat look.

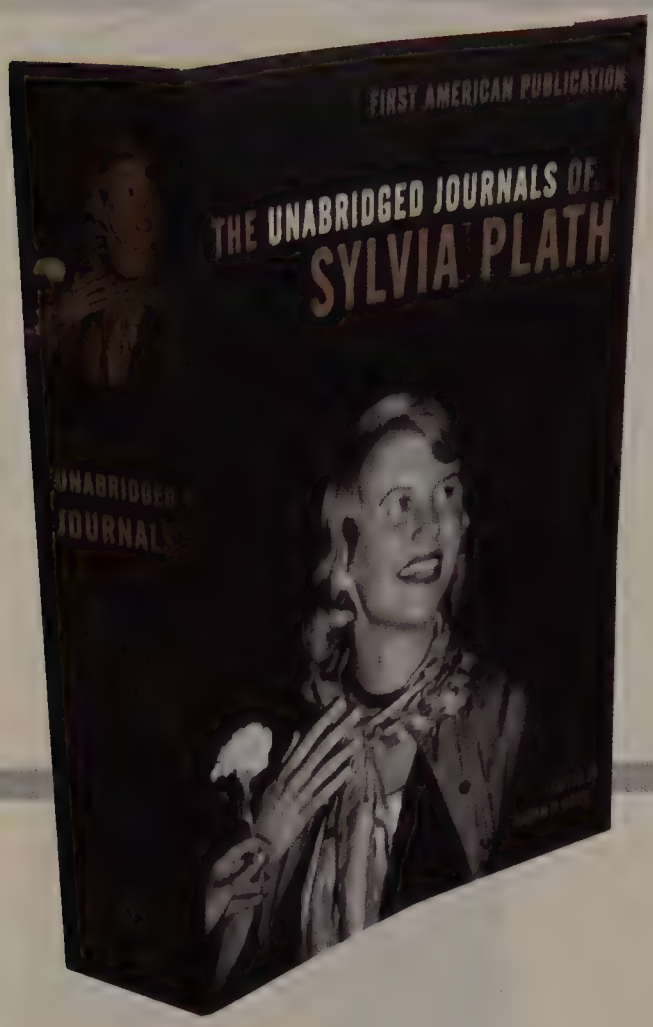
BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



SYLVIA, EVERLASTING

The Unabridged Journals of Sylvia Plath* includes her personal writings from 1950–1962, including years spent in Wellesley and Boston.

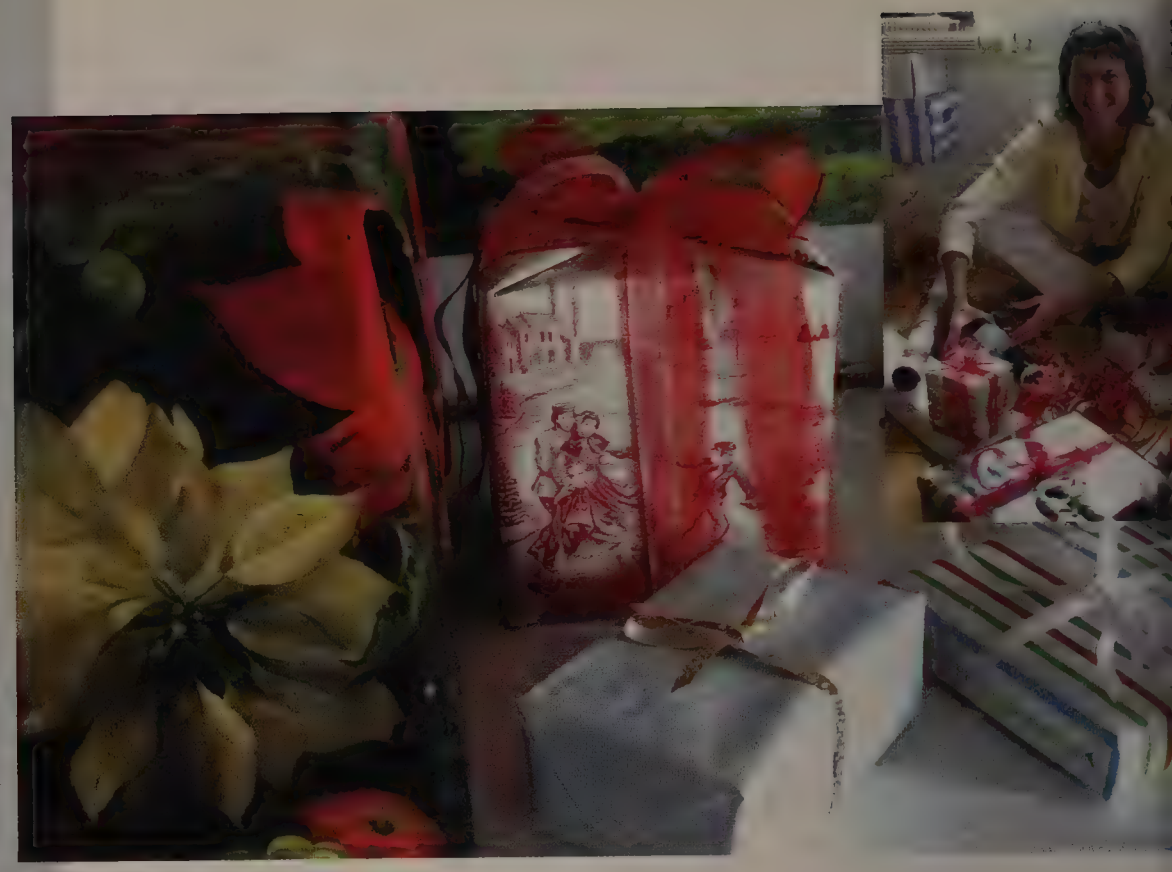
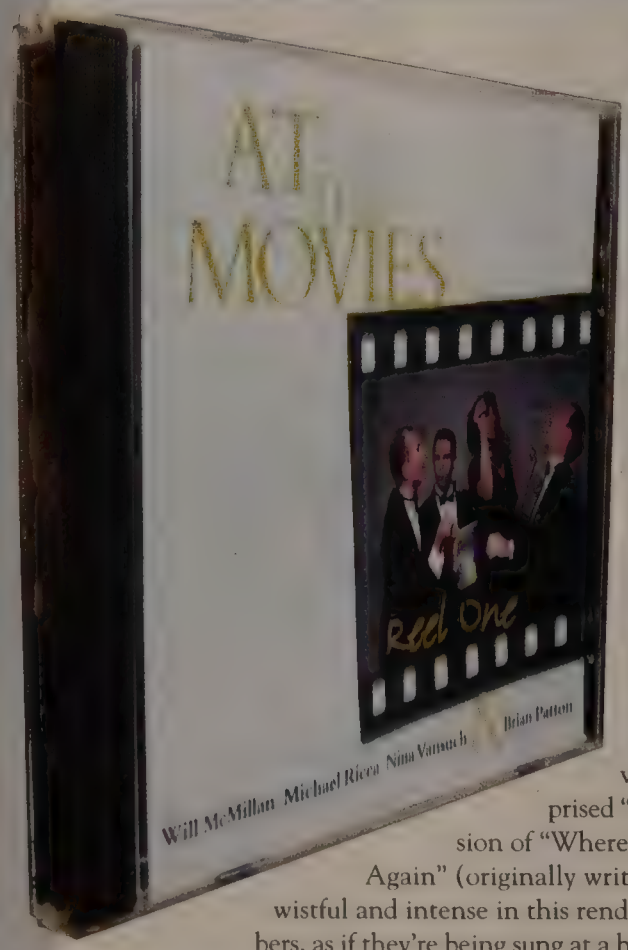
It's been 41 years since her suicide at age 30, but bookstore shelves are spilling over with books by and about Sylvia Plath and her husband, the poet Ted Hughes. The movie Sylvia has put both her energy and her despair on view. These unabridged journals—from her Wellesley youth, her time at Smith College and her return to Boston from England—display her intensity and tormented self-doubt as much as they do her lyricism and discipline. Reading these often self-lacerating pages, you might picture a woman who had more suffering than success. As a teenager, she grinds ferociously over questions of her intellect, ambition and marriage. She is at war with herself and her mother, and jealous of Ted's sometimes greater success, always whipping up into fevers of writing that foreshadow her tragic end. "Two silent strangers. Going back, there is the growing sickness, the separate sleep, and the sour waking. And all the time the wrongness growing, creeping, choking the house, twining the tables and chairs and poisoning the knives and forks, clouding the drinking water with that lethal taint." But Plath's tone of Rembrandt-tinged darkness often gives her misery a remarkable beauty.



CREATE CLEANER, PRETTIER SPACE

Joan Jordan helps you organize and decorate small spaces. She'll also wrap presents for you. $22–$35 per hour. Call 617-666-4128.

Living in a small apartment doesn't preclude having tons of motley things that need a place to perch Joan Jordan, with her background in art (she has displayed her paintings in galleries for the past 10 years), can help your possessions land both neatly and aesthetically. Her approach is sensitive, her tempo slow and inquiring, and she has no agenda to impose. Her general mission is to achieve artful containment of items along the continuum from chaotic clutter to beautiful displays—bringing similar things together attractively—while helping you preserve enough clear open indoor space. An inventive recycler, she's gathered such things as Baskin-Robbins ice cream cone boxes—to contain belongings that need to be out-of-sight in a sightly way—and scavenged scads of teeny hotel shampoo bottles to prettily display beads. One of Jordan's tropisms is New England nature, which sometimes informs her palette. She will research wallpaper patterns and help you consider them in largo leisure, at various times of day, composing your ultimate indoor stage set.



SOUND TRACKS, MERRILY SUNG

Local cabaret group At the Movies plays songs from the flicks of yore. The group performs Dec. 31 at 10 and 11:15 pm at the Rabb Lecture Hall of the Boston Public Library as part of the First Night celebration. Their CD, Reel One, is available at www.atmmusic.biz.

You're constrained from croony swooning and dancing around the cinema when a movie contains a delicious song. But you can emote a if you want to Reel One, the CD by local cabaret revue At the Movies. The group, comprising Will McMillan, Brian Patton, Michael Ricco and Nina Vansuch, reprises songs from the most Technicolor-sweet movies of the 1950s and '60s as well as a few newer ones. "Secret Love" and "A Dream Is a Wish Your Heart Makes," for instance, are given a revue-style swooping energy and cheerfulness by these three guys and a girl. One riotous number begins with Vansuch vocalizing the theme from "A Summer Place" (which starred Sandra Dee and Troy Donahue) until a voice whispers "Troy is gay." Vansuch's perky, surprised "Oh!" becomes the segue into the guys' queer version of "Where the Boys Are." Carly Simon's "Coming Around Again" (originally written for the Jack Nicholson movie Heartburn) is wistful and intense in this rendition. Sophistication reigns in most of the numbers, as if they're being sung at a hatbox-sized nightclub. Then the group turns on a dime and does a witty ditty from the TV show Animaniacs about Variety's fast-talking, breezily abbreviated language of show-biz. The group's live performance also includes its take on more recent tunes from the likes of South Park.

REVIEW

LOW-FAT, NO-FAT FARE

Lucy's in Coolidge Corner makes an earnest attempt at healthy meals—with mixed results

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

In order to distinguish themselves from the competition in the crowded Coolidge Corner restaurant scene, Lucy's energetic and engaging owner Mitzi Kaitz and her chef Owen Tilley have dedicated themselves to providing a haven for weight-conscious diners. Their single-minded assault on obesity is to be applauded. Unfortunately, the unevenness of their offerings may give a bad name to weight-conscious dining. If fat-free preparations are going to be effective and accepted, they must satisfy the craving for the good flavors and pleasant textures that make dining an enjoyable human experience, not just the mere ingestion of nourishment.

Lucy's physical appointments are attractive. An imposing wood-burning oven—nicknamed Bertha—dominates the bar side of the restaurant, which one enters from the street. Here, 10 or so bar stools and a scattering of tables accommodate patrons who flock to Lucy's on Thursday nights to hear live jazz. To the right of the entrance is an attractively decorated dining room, with two walls covered with paintings of musicians and their instruments in bold, primary colors. A third wall is hung with several mirrors of differing shapes and varying art deco frames, which strike a gleaming contrast to the lovely Williamsburg blue of the walls. Banquettes upholstered in pre-Columbian-design fabrics line one wall, and tables are covered with butcher paper over polyester tablecloths. Large blue tulip blossom sconces provide subdued lighting.

A decent way to begin a meal is with one of Lucy's wood oven pizzas, and the one I chose—prosciutto, roasted pear, Great Hill blue cheese, and caramelized onion ($12)—hit the spot. The salty ham; moist, mellow fruity pear; rich, creamy blue cheese; and sweet caramelized onions did justice to the crisp and resilient herb-garlic white flour crust. In addition to the pizza, Lucy's dinner menu includes 11 starters and 10 main events, all of which hew to the no-cream, no-butter protocol. In a recent menu revision, however, Lucy's has added another category to its dinner menu: "scale tippers...for those who are looking for a weightier meal—butters, oils and creams included." In the course of three visits to Lucy's, I tried three starters, one pizza, five main events and two desserts. The results were mixed at best.

One starter, pulled chicken tamale over mole verde and salsa fresca ($7), featured a large slab of formed cornmeal—a sort of Mexican polenta—garnished with shredded chicken and chopped fresh tomatoes, red peppers and parsley. While the flavor seemed timid, with the mole providing little kick, the dish turned out to be one of the better I tried. Even better were the steamed mussels with fresh basil, ginger, garlic and lemongrass ($9). The two dozen plump, sweet mussels, unflawed by even a grain of sand, arrived in a handsome ceramic pot filled with a heady, assertive broth that turned out to be the highlight of my three visits to Lucy's. In contrast, a soup of the day from the scale tipper side of the menu—shrimp gumbo—contained a good number of decent-textured shrimp. But both they and the thick, dark liquid in which they were swimming were so devoid of flavor that after dispatching most of the shrimp, I abandoned the rest of the soup. Remarkably, corn bread from Lucy's breadbasket mimicked the blandness of the soup. Better among the breads, all baked on premises, was the challah, particularly enjoyable when moistened with Lucy's balsamic and charred-tomato vinegar, a popular house condiment.

Lucy's main events ranged from quite good to disagreeable. On the quite good side was the baked whole trout stuffed with scallion brown rice over garlicky ginger green beans and lychees ($18). This firm-textured fish had been expertly boned and stuffed with moist, flavorful brown rice studded with scallions and garnished with cool, luscious, velvety lychees. Splendid, al dente green beans laced with fresh ginger enlivened the dish.

On the negative side of the ledger, two beef offerings competed for last place. Oven-roasted espresso-rubbed tenderloin of beef with butter-free basil mashed potatoes, stewed tomatoes, peppers, onions and horseradish calamata tapenade ($20) combined meat that lacked flavor (save for the unpleasantly bitter overtones of the espresso), coffee (a seasoning whose time has not, and never will, come) and vegetables that had the flavor somehow stewed out of them, leaving only the piquant earthiness of a small dollop of tapenade which seemed almost an afterthought, to tease the palate. The other beef offering, ground sirloin burger, "cooked to perfection," with grilled onion, ripe tomatoes, lettuce, Great Hill blue cheese and no-fry french fries ($12), demonstrated the perils of excessively lean beef. Without fat, no matter how cooked to perfection ground beef is, the result resembles cardboard or moistened sawdust, and Lucy's sirloin burger hovered between the two. Beside its dismal texture, the beef had an unpleasant, oddly sour flavor that could be masked only by eating it together with the cream, good, pleasantly sharp Great Hill blue cheese, one of Massachusetts' truly great products. The no-fry french fries replicate the burger's cardboard-like texture, demonstrating why french fries are called fries and ought to be cooked that way.

Another main event offering, a wood-oven-roasted salmon with sweet parsnip puree and fresh steamed vegetables ($17) delivered decent flavor, but the fish had a flabby, flaccid texture. The toothsome parsnip puree far outshone the bland steamed vegetables. Finally, Lucy's weighed in with the obligatory double-thick pork chop ($17), served with cranberry-wheat crumb stuffing, three-apple sauce and garlicky seared greens. The pork chop arrived rare as ordered, but it was flawed by imperfect trim that left too much fat. (The fat was difficult to avoid, hidden as it was under a coating of apple sauce.) The greens—multicolored chard, also served as a side dish—had an unpleasantly astringent, almost acrid flavor.

Due to a mix-up one evening, our waiter brought a cheese plate with an assortment of relishes, compotes and house-made crackers ($10) instead of the baked cheese preparation that I had ordered. This turned out to be a fine trio of mellow Taleggio cheese from Italy, dark-veined blue cheese from Spain and lively goat cheese from France, and the fruit compotes, including dates, figs and cranberries, provided the perfect accompaniment. When, on a subsequent visit, I finally did get to the baked cheese with roasted pearl onions, fresh herbs and assorted crostini ($8), it struck me as underwhelming—the cheese without character, the pearl onions AWOL, and the crostini a pile of toast points.

From Lucy's dessert selections, I homed in on the chocolate offerings. Warm chocolate soufflé with a lava center ($8) was so good that I ordered it twice. Chocolate espresso mousse with raspberry whipped cream ($8) scored a close second. Lucy's wine list was aggressively priced, and while the Badia y Coltibuono chianti ($7 a glass) combined good forward fruit with a fine bouquet and good structure, the skimpiness of the pour dismayed me.

Service at Lucy's was as inconsistent as the food. On one visit waitpersons sometimes seemed to operate as independent contractors, blissfully unaware and unresponsive to the needs of the tables for which they did not have direct, personal responsibility. One waiter seemed unfamiliar with ingredients or components of menu items. Still, the owner-hostess and the upbeat, energetic bartender—who was at once amiable, suave and even courtly—brought an earnestness and desire to please that compensated for a multitude of sins.

Lucy's principals hope to provide a haven for health-conscious diners.

Espresso-rubbed, oven-roasted beef tenderloin with basil mashed potatoes, stewed tomatoes, peppers, onions, horseradish and kalamata olive tapenade

A final note about the restaurant's concept. Now that carbohydrates, and not just fats, have been identified as a major culprit in America's obesity epidemic, Lucy's seems somewhat behind the curve. The ill-fated sirloin burger was accompanied by a huge doughy roll, and throughout the nonfat offerings, carbohydrates abounded. The sacrifice of flavor that accompanies the eschewing of butter, oil and cream is a high price to pay for food that may not have a palpably beneficial effect on the waistline. IB

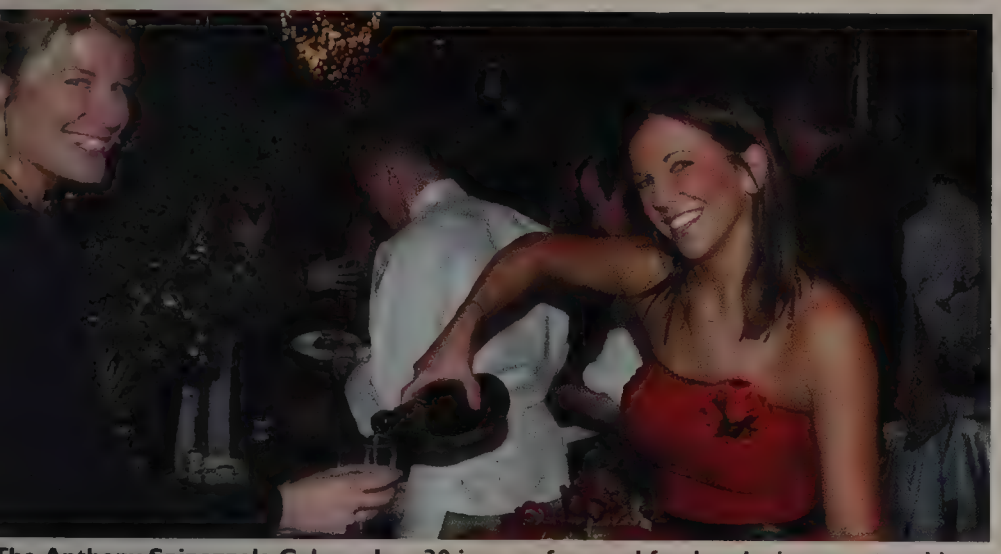
DineAround on hold...Grillfish sold... Toast breaks the mold...

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX



The Anthony Spinazzola Gala on Jan. 30 is one of several food and wine events taking place early in the New Year. The 2003 event is pictured here.

Nothing helps us get through a blustery, bone-chilling Boston winter like the annual lineup of cold-weather food and wine events. There's the Anthony Spinazzola Gala at the World Trade Center Jan. 30, with enough sequins and champagne to brighten the dead of winter. Running concurrently, as well as the next day, is the Boston Wine Expo. Starting in mid-January, the Boston Wine Festival at the Boston Harbor Hotel includes a series of receptions, tastings, seminars and dinners scheduled through the last of April's slush. And we're always cheered by the Boston DineAround, a multi-week extravaganza highlighting nationally-known chefs and cookbook authors, hosted by many of the area's best restaurants.

Well, no such cheer this year. The DineAround has been temporarily disconnected from the usual string of festivities for 2004, although we're assured it will return in 2005. What happened is that long-time corporate sponsor Fleet Bank was purchased by Bank of America several months ago, leaving the DineAround without its title sponsor, and with inadequate time to round up a replacement with deep enough pockets. Also cancelled this year is the annual bash at Le Meriden that kicks off the DineAround, which means less money will be raised for the Spinazzola Fund and the Greater Boston Food Bank. So if you're feeling disappointed, chip in a little extra this season to a good cause that fights hunger.

SECOND COURSE

Tanks for the memories: When some restaurants—we won't name names—close their doors, nobody cares. But when a dependable neighborhood favorite like Grillfish leaves, it's greatly missed. According to Michelle Stella, one of Grillfish's managers, the building on Columbus Avenue has been sold, and the space will reopen in a month or so. Sources tell us the new place will be an Italian restaurant. Ho-hum.

Spire hire: Gabriel Frasca is the new executive chef at Spire in the Nine Zero Hotel. Frasca, who recently returned to Boston after spending several months in Nantucket, was formerly chef de cuisine at Radius.

Toast opened in Somerville's Union Square just a few months ago with plans to serve an upscale menu created by Petal Joseph, formerly executive sous chef at Rialto. Given that the basement space proved to be bad feng shui for two previous very good chef-owned and -driven restaurants (Macondo and Rauxa), the concept seemed half-baked at best. It didn't take long, says general manager Sean Sullivan, to find that "the menu we were dealing with didn't fit the environment, wasn't making the money." And so it was replaced by a new pub menu, which includes "chicken teriyaki, a pasta dish, shrimp cocktail, chicken fingers, all of it from scratch," says Sullivan. After Joseph's menu became, uh, toast, she decided (not surprisingly) to leave. We'll let you know where she turns up next. iB

WINE

Popular Pinot Noir

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

It's official: Americans are now drinking more red wine than white, and the word from virtually every retailer I've spoken with this holiday season is that pinot noir has finally gone mainstream. For years this was the ultimate connoisseur's grape, a wine that critics lionized but consumers shunned. But it's suddenly become hot, and people are coming into stores asking for it, not just in cosmopolitan Boston but way out in the hinterlands.

What's caused the shift? For white wine fans transitioning to red, pinot noir's characteristic flavors and textures are easier to appreciate than those of the bigger, bolder and higher-tannin wines like cabernet, zinfandel or even a lot of syrah. These dark, impressively flavored macho wines are generally higher in alcohol and fruit extract, but they're more of an acquired taste and they definitely work better in autumn than in winter, unlike the all-season pinot. Another big factor is the ceiling on price that's impacted the wine market in a major way. As we pull out of the downturn that's gripped the economy for the last few years, the one habit that has yet to return is freewheeling spending on wine. For many people a $20 bill constitutes an almost absolute barrier they won't cross, unless they're shown a compelling reason. And good pinot noir has moderated in price recently—where it once was virtually impossible to find a good bottle for less than $25, now there are plenty of juicy, delicious ones out there for $15. It's partly a result of improvements in vineyard and winery practices that have enabled winemakers to actually make better wine for less money; that and the famed "wine glut" that's forced everyone to become more competitive in order to survive.

Our changing dietary preferences play a big part in pinot's newfound popularity as well. Here's where the perceived health benefits of two very different products converge, because pinot noir is the ultimate "red wine with fish" selection. As we turn increasingly to lower-cholesterol, higher-protein foods, it's no secret that fish consumption is on the rise. The problem is that most of the other well-known red wines on the market taste jarring and incongruous with most fish preparations; they're too full-bodied and potently flavored. These impressively big wines often also don't balance vegetarian or highly spicy ethnic dishes. On the other hand, a light- or medium-bodied red wine with mild tannins, silky textures, prominent fruitiness and acidity, like pinot noir, has an unusually high batting average when it's facing all of these foods.

I remember the first time I ordered pinot noir with fish in a restaurant, the waiter looked at me twice to make sure he'd heard correctly. Now this choice has become commonplace, particularly with salmon, swordfish or other meatier fish, like mako shark. In fact, industry veterans tell me that diners perplexed by what to order when everyone at the table is eating something different—from seafood to poultry to red meat—are more often satisfied with a pinot noir selection than any other. The one problem with ordering pinot in a restaurant is that it's often served too warm, which throws the flavors out of whack: too harsh and alcoholic. This is one red wine that can stand just a bit of a chill. Even 5 degrees difference can magically transform the wine from blah to delicious. So at times I've even asked for an ice bucket to get the wine down to proper temperature.

So where do we look for pinot noir today? I've been converted by the sunny charms of California. Where once I'd go to tastings of dozens of wines and not find a single California pinot noir I would willingly drink, the equation is almost exactly reversed today. Because it was such an unfashionable grape for so long, the weak players in the market were shaken out until only the committed remained. The vineyards that were planted in unsuitably warm parts of the state have been converted to other grapes, and there are new regions, particularly in the Central Coast's Monterey and Santa Barbara counties, that have arisen almost overnight to take up the mantle. There are five points of origin I would look for on a California wine label that are most consistently excellent in producing pinot noir. In generally descending order of price, they are: Sonoma's Russian River Valley, the Carneros district, Monterey's Santa Lucia Highlands, the Santa Maria Valley in Santa Barbara County, and, reversing direction to way up north, Mendocino County. Other great sources are Oregon's Willamette Valley and New Zealand. If you're invited to dinner and you don't know what's being served, you probably can't go wrong if you bring a bottle of pinot from any one of these places. Just make sure the bottle's not too warm. ■

Performing Arts: Who's in Town?

At its most basic level, Urinetown—the wildly popular musical that started its life in 1999 at a fringe festival in New York—is about two kids who fall in love in the midst of a water-shortage crisis. At its most pretentious level, it's a "neo-Brechtian absurdist melodrama." And in the words of reviewer Michael Criscuolo from NYTheatre.com, "It's crude. It's offensive. It quotes heavily from other musicals. It's blatantly self-conscious...It's often quite tasteless...But Urinetown is also one of those rare shows that lives up to its own hype."

Winner of 2002 Tony Awards for Best Director, Best Book of a Musical and Best Original Score, this surprise hit by Greg Kotis both spoofs and celebrates Broadway favorites like Les Miserables, Annie and West Side Story. Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-931-2787). Tue.-Fri., 8pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30 pm. Jan. 6-18. $30-$87.

Performing Arts: Great Bad Dates

To find 200 pairs of slingbacks, pumps and stilettos for its production of Bad Dates, the props department at the Huntington Theatre Company had to borrow shoes from friends, family—even the playwright, Theresa Rebeck. The one-woman show stars Six Feet Under's Julie White (for whom Rebeck wrote the play) as shoe connoisseur and restaurant manager Haley Walker. It's kind of a Sex and the City...10 Years Later. Haley's a single mother re-entering the dating scene. As she prepares for or unwinds from her dates (changing into more than a dozen outfits in the process), she relates her experiences to the audience. The New York Times said of the show, which premiered this summer at Playwrights Horizons Theatre in the Big Apple, "There is no more endearing character portrayal onstage in New York." Huntington Theatre, 264 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-266-0800). www.huntingtontheatre.org. Tue., 7:30 pm; Wed., 2 and 7:30 pm; Thu., 7:30 pm; Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7 pm. $14-$64.

CityScope: Creative Carvings

There's always one First Night ice sculpture that gets more attention than the rest, and this year's big kahuna at center stage on Boston Common is the ice sculpture of Japan's Edo Castle. The castle, sponsored by the Japan Society of Boston as part of its centennial celebration, will be created by three Japanese ice sculptors and several American artists. The team will work on the sculpture the entire week after Christmas and will finish it on the morning of New Year's Eve. The mammoth sculpture will weigh 45 tons, and stand 20 feet tall (pre-meltage, that is). The First Night opening ceremony is at the castle site on the Common at 11:30 am. You can even take home a commemorative gift box filled with an assortment of Edo Castle–shaped dark chocolates ($5-$50), sold by the Japan Society of Boston (617-451-0726).

CityScope: Pre-Party Prep

There's only one way to develop a high tolerance for alcohol (a must if you're going to survive the holidays), and we all know what that entails. So, to prepare for the onslaught of New Year's festivities, we recommend starting early. On Dec. 20, there are two party options to help bolster your yuletide stamina. The Mayflower Foundation's annual holiday party takes place at a most unusual locale—the Franklin Park Zoo's tropical forest, a 3.5-acre indoor exhibit, where party-goers can dine among gorillas and assorted wildlife. It's open bar, and dress is semiformal. Proceeds from the $75 ticket go to development programs to benefit the Egleston Square Youth Center. The second option is Y Pro's (Young Professionals of New England) annual Martinis with Mrs. Claus fete at Vinalia. It's also got an open bar (with specialty martinis), plus dinner, apps, music and dancing. A $30 ticket gets you into the party, $59 gets you the three-course dinner. You have to be a member to attend, but membership is free and you can join online. Franklin Park Zoo, One Franklin Park Zoo Road, Boston (888-215-5506). 9 pm-2 am. Vinalia, 101 Arch St., Boston (617-983-2232). www.ypro.com. 8 pm-2 am.

Tastings: Decadent Fun

Imagine indulging in a white chocolate lemon parfait with chocolate ravioli stuffed with apricots and pecans and drizzled with white chocolate sauce and apricot coulis as an appetizer at the Top of the Hub. Then you move on to the Omni Parker House for an entrée of Boston cream pie. Finally, when you think your stomach can't handle any more, you head to Le Meridien for dessert: an all-you-can eat buffet of chocolate mousse, chocolate cake, chocolate tortes, chocolate eclairs, crepes, ice cream, cookies and pies. Ready? Or not? The Boston Chocolate Tour starts up again on Jan. 3. It's a three-hour journey aboard a trolley, complete with fun facts about Boston's rich chocolate history. And did we mention that Finale provides chocolate snacks for the ride? Prepare to pig out. Boylston and South Charles streets, Boston (617-269-3626). Sat. and Sun., 11:30 am and 12:45 pm. Jan. 3-March 28. $60.

Le Meridien's Chocolate Bar is a challenge for even the most die-hard chocoholic.

Gone Fishin'

Despite iffy ideas, Burton hooks a keeper

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Sometimes the old Marshall McLuhan saying is right: The medium is the message. Tim Burton's comfortably rambling Big Fish is proof. Its central relationship, between a tall-tale-spinning Southern dad (Albert Finney) and his skeptical grown son (Billy Crudup) is only of mild interest. The bulk of the plot involves the semi-estranged son returning home after his father becomes ill, to try to wring some truth out of all the myths his father has repeatedly told about himself. Ultimately, the son learns to embrace the myths dad has wildly spun out of the truth, tales that, like Dorothy's dream in The Wizard of Oz, build from real people in his life. This gives the movie a dubious "fabrication over fact" message, embracing wishful embellishment over reality.

Ewan McGregor plays optimistic dreamer Edward Bloom in Tim Burton's new movie, Big Fish

That message might have been enough reason to dismiss Big Fish, if it weren't for the fact that Burton is its storyteller. How Burton tells the story trumps what he's telling here. That's because the exciting parts don't involve Finney and Crudup, and that's no jab at them. It's the flashbacks and fantasy sequences featuring Ewan McGregor that give the movie its life, that Burton really sinks his imaginative teeth into and that are the first things anyone will remember from this movie.

Ewan McGregor plays young Edward Bloom, Finney's character, in adventures rife with metaphor and larger-than-life fate. Most of them find Edward encountering his destiny in some way. In one, he leads a group of friends in approaching a dreaded local witch (Helena Bonham Carter), so each can look in her glass eye and, as legend holds, see his moment of death. In another, he lands an "uncatchable" fish in his hometown's river on the same day his son is born. In a third, he parachutes into China on a secret military mission and, in addition to carrying out his task, liberates a pair of Siamese-twin torch singers (Ada and Arlene Tai).

And in perhaps the most bewitching fantasy, Edward volunteers to talk to a giant (George McArthur) who's scared the local townspeople, and the experience makes him realize that, like the giant, he needs to leave town for larger surroundings. When Edward takes "the old road" out of town, he comes out in the hidden and blissfully idyllic town of Spectre, where Edward's life would be just grand if he stayed put. But he realizes it's not the life he's meant to have, so he moves on. (In Spectre, Edward also meets the wayward poet played by Steve Buscemi, one of the movie's more memorable characters, who returns in later action.)

These flashback tales emerge like pieces in a jigsaw puzzle, filling in gaps about Edward's life at different places. Another memorable incident comes when young Edward and the giant go to work in a circus (run by Danny DeVito's character), where Edward catches a fleeting glimpse of the woman he decides he's destined to marry (Alison Lohman) and eventually courts her. (Jessica Lange plays this woman later in life.)

Burton gives many of these fantasy sequences eye-popping colors suggestive of a View-Master slide, while McGregor's lively performance might remind you of another optimistic dreamer from a Burton movie—Johnny Depp's Ed Wood. With his performance as swaggering Camelot-era man-about-town Catcher Block in Down with Love and now his role as young Edward Bloom, McGregor has improbably shown himself to be a crackerjack portrayer of American gumption, amusingly capturing Edward's oversized personality.

The comparisons with Ed Wood—the least-seen Burton movie, but one of his best—run deeper than both movies' eager, undaunted heroes. Big Fish has a similar sense of community, and of colorful characters orbiting the hero. But those supporting players had more to do in Ed Wood, so the sense of community came across with more feeling and panache. In the uplifting ending of Big Fish, in which the son realizes the foundation of truth in his father's tall tales, there's a glib, pat closure that feels out of place in a Burton movie. But those colorful tales, and those exploits in fishing holes, hidden towns and witches' scary houses speak much louder than anything else in Big Fish. iB

Big Fish ★★★

Directed by Tim Burton. Written by John August. Based on the novel by Daniel Wallace. With Albert Finney, Billy Crudup, Ewan McGregor, Jessica Lange, Alison Lohman, Danny DeVito, Helena Bonham Carter, Robert Guillaume and Steve Buscemi. Rated PG-13. Columbia Pictures.

Bad Santa ★★★½
Finally, a Christmas movie about a degenerate. A cussing, sex-addicted, drunk degenerate. In a Santa suit. Billy Bob Thornton is an absolute hoot as the department store St. Nick who, with his midget, elf-costumed partner (the equally ticked-off Tony Cox), sets up shop every December in a different city and a different store, and then robs the store safe on Christmas Eve. This Santa's aversion to anything and everything besides drink and tail makes him an unrepentant poster boy for misanthropy, while director Terry Zwigoff (Ghost World) again proves his integrity by not wimping out with a soft, Elf-style ending. Full of bad taste and good laughs. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Cooler ★★
As he often has, William H. Macy plays a guy getting the fuzzy end of life's stick in this Vegas comedy-drama. He's a sad sack whose luck is so bad that his job is merely to turn up at the casino where he works and cool down gamblers' hot streaks. He's about to quit and, presumably, try to change his luck in life, especially now that he's started a relationship with a round-the-block casino waitress (Maria Bello). That might have been an interesting tale had writer-director Wayne Kramer stuck to it. Instead, the story brings in too many outside forces—including the return of the cooler's estranged son (Shawn Hatosy) and the pressures the casino manager (Alec Baldwin) is feeling to "modernize"—that clutter the plot. The interesting hero at the center just gets smothered by it all. (At Copley Place and Harvard Square.)

Elephant ★★
The plodding artsy touches in Gus Van Sant's movie, especially all those tracking shots of characters walking and walking (left over from his Gerry), make this the clear runner-up to Zero Day in the Columbine-inspired indie movie sweepstakes. The idea is sound: matter-of-factly following a group of characters on the day of a school shooting—some are victims, some are shooters, some are neither. The movie exposes all sorts of small everyday details, but there's little drama, little emotion, little reason to care. It seems more like a science project than a tragedy. (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Elf ★★½

The House of Sand and Fog ★★
Local author Andre Dubus III's father wrote the story on which In the Bedroom was based. Now the younger Dubus has had a novel adapted, and you could call this similar film In the Three-Bedroom. Like the previous movie, it compounds tragedy upon tragedy. The first is when emotional wreck Kathy (Jennifer Connelly) loses her house when it is mistakenly seized for nonpayment of taxes. Before she can correct the mistake, the house goes up for auction and is grabbed by a down-and-out former Iranian colonel (Ben Kingsley) who wants to sell it to maintain his family's standard of living. The struggle between these two people dependent on the house is inevitably headed for more tragedy, but the plot takes a convoluted and not very involving path to get there, and is too dependent on an imprudent sheriff's deputy (Ron Eldard) who tries to help Kathy but repeatedly messes things up. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Human Stain ★★★
I wouldn't call Robert (Twilight) Benton's adaptation of Philip Roth's novel well made—it's unfocused and bursting with loose ends, and Gary Sinise's character is deadwood that might have been trimmed away. But most of this tale of a retired professor (Anthony Hopkins) with a secret, and the emotionally wounded younger lover (Nicole Kidman) he takes up with, is very involving, despite those problems. Hopkins employs unexpected restraint, while Kidman's stretch as a self-destructive working-class divorcée is impressive. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

The Last Samurai ★★
Dances with Wolves goes east in this 1870s tale of a cavalry officer (Tom Cruise) who's sent to Japan to help train the emperor's troops to fight off a rebellion by samurai opposed to Japan's modernization. When the officer, who's been disillusioned ever since witnessing Custer's brutal campaign against Nativ

Americans, is taken prisoner by the samurai and carted back to their mountain camp, he sees that, like the Indians back home, they're not the savages the government claims they are. Director Ed Zwick (Glory, Courage Under Fire) again exhibits the social conscience that is his trademark, but his message is compromised by his casting of Cruise. Although the movie salutes community and unselfishness, it also expends most of its energy glorifying its star. Ultimately, it's as hypocritical as someone who says "Do what I say, not what I do." (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lost in Translation ★★★½
Sofia Coppola dealt with shared pain in her 2000 directorial debut, The Virgin Suicides, and she conjures up a similar funny-sad tone in her tale of two Americans (Bill Murray, Scarlett Johansson) adrift in Tokyo. He's a washed-up movie star making a bundle endorsing Japanese booze; she's the wife of a work-consumed photographer (Giovanni Ribisi). They're staying at the same hotel and killing time at the same hotel bar, and their misery loves company. The characters make a great movie couple, although their relationship is platonic (with its share of sexual tension). Murray gives a Buster Keaton–like, sad-clown performance built mainly around physical and especially facial reactions to absurd situations, and Johansson is a little heartbreaker. (At Copley Place, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Love Actually ★★
Veteran English writer Richard Curtis (Four Weddings and a Funeral) makes his directorial debut with this shameless romantic comedy, which operates under the same say-it-loud and pile-on-the-exclamation-points concept as the oversized greeting card. In his movie's case, that means he piles on about eight half-baked romantic subplots, hoping they'll miraculously accumulate into one big plot. If only. Nearly all of these subplots are flimsy and shallow, especially one with Hugh Grant as the new English prime minister. Unfortunately, Grant is back to his pre-2000 bumbling. Bill Nighy, as a desperate, aging rock star, and Rowan Atkinson (a frequent Curtis collaborator) add genuine comic relief occasionally. But a romantic movie as weak as this should not be allowed to use a song as good as the Beach Boys' "God Only Knows" during its climax. There oughta be a law. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Master and Commander: The Far Side of the World ★★★
An intense, eye-popping opening battle and director Peter Weir's realistic storytelling help this naval epic sail over dull patches, gabby interludes and ho-hum subplots. The level of authenticity is so much higher than any mere piece of spectacle in this 1805 story of the crew of an English ship that is attacked by a French ship, and then spends the rest of the movie tracking it to get revenge. Russell Crowe plays the battle-wise captain and Paul Bettany is the ship's inquisitive scientist, and though these friends' dialogues about the merits of science can't compare with the action sequences, Crowe especially breathes great life into his character. For once, the special effects serve the story in a big movie, and not the other way around. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

The Missing ★½
Endless, bloated and bland as a Saturday night in Wichita, Ron Howard's western features a flimsy plot, underdeveloped characters and his own tired direction. Cate Blanchett plays the 1880s frontier woman whose daughter (Evan Rachel Wood) is kidnapped by Indians, while Tommy Lee Jones plays her estranged father, who "went Indian" long ago and now offers to help find the girl, despite his daughter's resentment. Along the way, the frontier woman learns that there are good Indians and bad Indians, that Indian healing can work where her sort of healing won't and that Dad isn't the total dirtbag she thought he was. But don't expect this soggy, soulless movie to actually have a point of view. Every time a benefit of Indian, "nontraditional" culture pops up, a benefit of Eurocentric, Christian culture is sure to follow, and vice versa. And every time a drawback of Indian culture comes up, a drawback of Eurocentric culture falls in place, too. This is multiculturalism in the worst, safest sense. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Shattered Glass ★★★
The story of Stephen Glass, the hotshot New Republic reporter who turned out to have faked most of his articles, becomes a fascinating drama that avoids the usual stodginess of docudramas. Instead of showing us the hows and whys of Glass' fakery—does anyone really know that besides Glass himself?—the movie presents Glass (Hayden Christensen) as an eager-to-please go-getter who appears taken in by his own veneer of guilelessness (and also appears to be the best co-worker anyone could have). That self-deception may be the biggest and most interesting deceit in the movie, which also touches upon entertainment's dangerous, seductive power over journalism. The strong supporting cast includes Peter Saarsgard, Chloe Sevigny, Hank Azaria and Melanie Lynskey. (At Kendall Square and Copley Place.)

The Station Agent ★★★
This comedy about a dwarf (Peter Dinklage) who moves into an abandoned train depot in a small New Jersey town might have been a cloyingly quirky indie film. Instead, it's a pretty special experience. Dinklage's deadpan performance as Fin wryly captures how his character's expectations of his fellow man have been pounded down by their reaction to his height. Broader comedy comes from Bobby Canavale, as a food-truck owner who tries to befriend Fin, and Patricia Clarkson, as a woman escaping a fizzled marriage whom Fin tries to befriend. There's a wise and endearing clash of humanity here, and an unpredictable story to go along with it. (At Kendall Square.)

21 Grams ★★
Director Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu used time to great effect in his bracing debut, Amores Perros. In his follow-up (his first American-made movie), his use of nonlinear structure doesn't go so smoothly. Again Gonzalez blends three stories—of a newly widowed woman (Naomi Watts), a born-again ex-con (Benicio Del Toro) and a terminally ill professor (Sean Penn)—but the film's first half is so hyperactive that it's hard to get into it. That's when the action jumps so often—in time, and among the three characters—that it lacks a center. When the film finally settles down, and we see the three lives intersect, the action gets genuinely dramatic at last, and Watts' raw performance is especially compelling. But that first half is a big price to pay to get to the second. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Zero Day ★★★½
The thought of a movie inspired by the Columbine school shooting isn't very appealing. But director and cowriter Ben Coccio's debut is a potent and involving tale of two high school outsiders (Andre Keuck, Calvin Robertson) planning just such an attack. The movie is composed of excerpts from the video diary the characters are filming to chronicle their preparations for the big day, and the action feels amazingly authentic. Keuck and Robertson are simply tremendous. They're also smart and initially likable, which makes the characters' on-camera gun demonstrations and their climactic attack all the more tragic. (At Copley Place and Coolidge Corner.)

Sound and Vision

Concert DVDs and CDs to stuff the music lover's stocking

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

'Tis the season for year-end lists and last-minute holiday gifts. Here are my picks for CDs and concert DVDs. The CD list is slanted toward my critical favorites of 2003, and the DVDs lean toward popular entries in a booming field. DVDs can't replace the experience of seeing these artists on tour, but they provide great bang for the buck, and are the next best thing to being there when the weather leaves you housebound.

CDs

1. Radiohead, Hail to the Thief (Capitol). The great Brit hope of modern art-rock splices abstract soundscapes with a return to accessible melodies and a bleak political outlook.

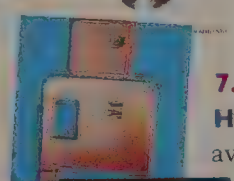
2. Nick Cave and the Bad Seeds, Nocturama (Anti/Epitaph). Shifts from melancholy poetry to the 14-minute opus "Babe, I'm On Fire," a relentless rave of tongue-in-cheek testimony.

3. Rufus Wainwright, Want One (DreamWorks). A new high for Wainwright's opulent, ambitious pop, which transcends its cabaret, Tin Pan Alley and operatic influences. A musical shouldn't be far behind.

4. The White Stripes, Elephant (V2/Third Man). The bastard child of Zeppelin-esque blues and cocky grunge, Jack White trades his duo's candy-cane minimalism for widescreen wallop.

5. Isley Meets Bacharach, Here I Am (DreamWorks). Soul legend Ronald Isley performs first-take magic, tenderly reinterpreting Burt Bacharach chestnuts with a live studio orchestra. American Idols need not apply.

6. Kings of Leon, Youth & Young Manhood (RCA). The South will rise again, led by scruffy sons of a Pentecostal preacher who found their rock and roll salvation in Tom Petty and the Stones.



7. The Bad Plus, These Are the Vistas (Columbia). A jazz piano trio deconstructs offbeat covers and originals with punk-rock attitude, classical finesse and sly counterpoint.

8. AFI, Sing the Sorrow (DreamWorks). Post-hardcore misfits whip their punk, metal and gothic ambitions into shape with dream-team producers Jerry Finn (Green Day) and Butch Vig (Nirvana, Garbage).

9. OutKast, Speakerboxxx/The Love Below (Arista). Andre 3000's "Hey Ya!" might be the single of the year, but these twin solo CDs prove hip-hop partner Big Boi's own funkadelic party is equally potent.

10. The Dresden Dolls, The Dresden Dolls (Eight Foot). A punk-cabaret duo in whiteface, Boston's most original act in ages exorcises the dark emotions in Amanda Palmer's theatrical songs of piano and pathos.

Concert DVDs

1. The Rolling Stones, Four Flicks (TGA). Stones fans get three concerts (theater, arena and stadium shows) from the recent Licks tour, plus a fourth documentary disc and DVD features like mixable setlists and "Select-a-Stone" camera isolation. Retailers fume at Best Buy's exclusive on this set. But as a sweeping souvenir of Stones classics and soul covers for only $30, it's a steal for fans.

2. Led Zeppelin, DVD (Atlantic). It's been a long time since anyone could rock to Zeppelin on tour, but that's all the more reason to marvel. Overdue footage from four different eras, amazingly restored, provides clear proof of the band's prowess and breadth, from the brash jazz-blues attack of 1970 to the swan song of 1979, plus rare TV clips and interviews.

3. Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band, Live in Barcelona (CMV). There's supposedly Fenway Park footage in the bonus featurette, but good luck spotting it. Get this DVD for the full-length concert in Spain. Not the hottest night of the Rising tour, but there are plenty of highlights from a flexible, front-row perspective.

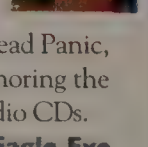
4. Peter Gabriel, Growing Up Live (Real World/Geffen). Better on DVD than in person. Fans get an inside/upside view of the fantasy props that transformed the center stage of this art-rocker's last tour, including his roll around the stage in a transparent ball, and an upside-down stroll.

5. U2, Go Home: Live from Slane Castle (Interscope). A climactic communion with the supergroup's hometown "tribe" at Slane Castle outside Dublin, where the exhilarating setting and emotional energy make up for sometimes blinding spotlights. Includes a 1984 documentary on the Unforgettable Fire sessions at Slane.

6. Rush, Rush in Rio (Anthem/Zoe). Another wild setting: The Canadian power trio plays its tour finale in front of 60,000 cheering Brazilian fans. Easy navigation (except for two hidden clips), a tour documentary and camera isolation (perfect to zero in on drummer Neil Peart).

7. Bjork, Vespertine: Live at the Royal Opera House (One Little Indian). Iceland's visionary avant-pop star mesmerizes with her band featuring the electronic duo Matmos, a harpist, an Inuit choir and full orchestra. The show is well filmed and interviews are included.

8. Dave Matthews Band, The Central Park Concert (RCA). A big event heavy on vintage DMB favorites, topped by a cover of Neil Young's "Cortez the Killer" with guitarist Warren Haynes (Gov't Mule, Allman Brothers). Briskly shot, but with good angles and exceptional sound.



9. Gov't Mule, The Deepest End (ATO). Shot in New Orleans with straightforward clarity onstage and earthy charm backstage. Guests range from the Dirty Dozen Brass Band to bassists from Widespread Panic, Los Lobos, Deep Purple, Primus and the Meters, honoring the late Mule bassman Allen Woody. Packaged with audio CDs.

10. Pat Metheny Group, Speaking of Now Live (Eagle Eye Media). No extras, but crisp sound and footage from Japan of the guitar virtuoso's most recent tour with his textural jazz-fusion outfit. iB

1/12 Monday 7PM
AZAR NAFISI Reading Lolita in Tehran

Azar Nafisi has spent a lifetime struggling against radical Islam's war against women. Reading Lolita in Tehran tells her courageous and moving story of how she and her resilient young students managed to escape the harsh constraints of their daily lives through the literature that they read together every week.

1/14 Wednesday 7PM
JEROME GROOPMAN M.D.
The Anatomy of Hope

Jerome Groopman has gleaned many astonishing and profound discoveries in his thirty years as a physician, in addition to being one of the most respected literary voices on the science and human dimension of medicine. With The Anatomy of Hope, he charts a journey of discovery with often-painful lessons that offer insight into how hope acts in the drama of medicine.

1/22, Thursday 7PM
CHRIS BOHJALIAN Idyll Banter

After trading his Brooklyn co-op for a century-old home in Vermont, Chris Bohjalian, a Booksmith favorite and the best-selling author of Midwives and Buffalo Soldier, soon began chronicling life in Lincoln (pop. 985) for magazines and a weekly newspaper column. Serving as a diary of Chris' life and a measured example of how America has changed in the last fifteen years, Idyll Banter collects sixty-two of these thoughtful essays.

RECENT CORRESPONDENCE FOLLOWS.

Blue and Curly

Beantown Pub, sometime in the middle of October on a Friday: My friend and I pulled in for a few bourbons and were standing next to your group of friends by the window. We threw eyes back and forth but you guys were just having too good of a time for me to break it up. I was the tall, curly-haired boy in the blue shirt; you were the tall blond girl dressed in black. I figure you're one to read this, so why not? How about getting ahold of me?

—blueatbeantown@yahoo.com

Red Your Book

Red shoes, red hat, red corduroy pants, red fur-lined coat. I red your book in the Braintree Barnes & Noble the night of Nov. 22 and am oh-so-blue we didn't connect. You: reading a home decorating magazine in the children's section. Me: 5' 11", slender, with scarf and yellow cashmere sweater, looking for music software to teach kids harmony and counterpoint. I need advice on renovating my living room and would like your input. Let's meet for red zinger tea and cherry pie sometime.

—redyourbook@yahoo.com

Nov. 21, Peat Moss Show at Ned Devine's

You: the most beautiful girl I have ever seen in Boston. You have amazing black, curly hair that bounced around as you danced without spilling your Bud Light. In the movie of your life, you would be played by Julianna Margulies. I talked to your friend, Sarah, who said your name was Patricia—and then tried to sell me a condo. Then you disappeared. Me: smart-looking guy wearing a corduroy shirt, jeans and a look on my face that said...wow. I'd like to take you out for a Bud Light sometime.

Home and Garden's Youngest and Most Attractive Reader

I'm pretty sure that's enough, but just in case: Green Line, Tuesday before Thanksgiving, 6 pm. You have a terrific smile. So sorry I had to leave. I'd love an opportunity to have a longer, more relaxed conversation.

—ggardener6@hotmail.com

South End Elizabeth

It was 2 pm, Nov. 29, at Flour Bakery on Washington Street. After bribing a guy for information, you ordered a tuna sandwich, a salad and a raspberry seltzer. Coldplay playing in the background, you sporting a wooly Patagonia fleece, golden (tan-ish) cargo pants, and light brown hair. You walked all the way up West Newton to probably Tremont, when I realized what a mistake I had made by not introducing myself. I was the tall hottie with Diesel jeans and a turtleneck. E-mail me, and the next seltzer is on me!

—charles_cedarleaf@yahoo.com

Game On

We were in a Newbury Street basement bar watching the Red Sox. You were waiting for your friends, I was waiting for mine. You are blond and were wearing prescription sunglasses to see the game. We exchanged stalker stories and Charlestown haunts—ring a bell? I wanted to stay and chat, but I left when our friends arrived. Want to talk now? E-mail me.

—redsoxtalk@yahoo.com

Betsy, Who Lives and Works in Dudley Square

We met at a store on Bromfield Street. I left first and waited for you. We joined up near Tremont and walked and talked until we were near Boylston. You wanted a good place to invest some cash; I gave you the phone number to call. It was my mistake not to include my cell phone number as well. You were on your two-week vacation, staying in Boston, while I was in Vegas the following week. I'd love to get together again. We can meet at the same store, or you could just leave a note addressed to Vacation Guy in a sealed envelope there. I look forward to getting together with you.

—Vacation guy

Let's Eat Some Hay and Lay by the Bay

I want you bad! More than you'll ever know. Now that you're back, I don't want you to ever go. I feel it's a second chance for me to make my move; I would be so good to you, that I can prove. Waiting for my chance to make your heart smile, the same way you've made mine for a while. I know we're just friends with a strong physical attraction, but we could be so much more and have complete satisfaction. I'm down if you're down to have something real with someone who adores you, and wants to explore you, just let me know and I would be all for you.

Dear Gentle Consumer

Do I look like a punching bag? A stress ball, perhaps? Or better yet, your therapist? No, I look like none of these things, yet as soon as you put a sales counter between you and me you treat me with all the disrespect in the world. Do you think I care that your grandmother/aunt/mother/cousin twice removed has to get these cards tomorrow? Why yell at me when you could have had your cards made last September, when you took the picture? Gentle Consumer, why at this time of the year do you think that you can yell, scream, and stamp your feet to get your way? It's Christmas and I don't need your money—there are 30 other people who are just as stressed and busy as you are who will treat me like the sales professional that I am. So yes, I know there are long lines, lots of traffic and lots of things to do. But, Gentle Consumer, you know what? I also have all these things to do after spending nine hours on my feet serving you and your needs. And I do it with a smile on my face and few nice comments to the sales professional behind the counter—because he too is a person with many people to help and lots of things on his list to do.

—The person behind the counter

Hark!

I was the woman with the short, red hair and the vacant look in her eyes at the Hark at HLS during Thanksgiving week, so lost in my own thoughts that when you asked "Is this seat taken? I hate sitting at these big tables alone," I automatically said "No. Please sit," and barely glanced up at the nice-looking man who sat across from me. I rudely did not even think about you and that you might have liked to talk. I finished lunch quickly, looked at you briefly, and said "Have a nice lunch," then left. It wasn't until I got back to my office that I thought about the incredulous shrug you gave me. If you ever want to have lunch again, I would be happy to be your companion, and I will actually pay attention this time. I'm usually very friendly, but sometimes I'm just...

To All You Rude Idiots on Public Transportation

Turn your music down, stop shouting at your friends, offer your seat to the elderly, take your feet off the seats and move your bags off of the empty seat next to you. You are not at home, so quit treating the trains and buses like your living room.

—Tired of dealing with inconsiderate people

Giving Thanks

Copley Square Fleet ATM, the Tuesday before Thanksgiving: You turned in my ATM card, which I foolishly left in the slot. The babies got fed and I got to see the Paris video without taking out a loan. Holiday saved! You have one free on your Karma card—feel free to trip an old lady. Thank you, bubeleh!

rockie horoscope

SAGITTARIUS NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Ahh, the joys of self-absorption. It's primarily during Sagittarius that you are blessed with enough opportunities to show your true colors and get away with it. You know you're supposed to be thinking of your fellow humans and what they want for Christmas, but, truth be told, until your birthday has come and gone, the holidays are all about you. Since Mercury will be retrograde in your Capricorn money house, take it easy with the credit cards when shopping. And watch out for identity theft.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

How to handle having Mercury retrograde in your sign at this time? Give up all hope of controlling the flow of anything, except maybe the eggnog. Add hours, even days, to your travel plans, and bring extra money for contingencies and food to sustain you while you wait to get where you're going. Or don't go. Like your Sag buddy, you shine your brightest during the holiday season, so no matter where you spend it, you'll have an excellent time. Just ignore, don't smack, the Scrooges and Grinches.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Who has the most friends? Who should wait until Mercury flips on Dec. 17th before finalizing their gift lists? Who's naughty, who's nice? Who knows, because something unexpected could alter your sense of allegiance, your identification with a particular group during Mercury's turnaround. While romance might not figure into your holiday plans as yet, admit that you're attracting a new crew of admirers, an artier bunch than the folks who usually gravitate to your place. Thank Venus and her sidekick, Eros.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Say yes. Graciously accept whatever goodies you're offered this holiday season, no matter how inappropriate they may seem at the moment. It'll be another 12 years before wise and generous Jupiter visits your Virgo house of allies again. By Christmas 2015, your self-sacrificing Neptune ruler will be in Pisces, and you may already be a monk or a nun. So if there's anything on the material plane you have your eye on, drop hints to anyone remotely close. One person could be your good luck charm, another, your future guru.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

On the 16th, your passionate Mars ruler finally stepped out of the tepid tub it had been soaking in since mid-June. If you hadn't noticed, six months of navigating through ambiguous Piscean waters could feel like forever. Even though Mars will spend only seven weeks in Aries, imagine how much you can accomplish when you have loads of energy and clear-cut goals. Just be sure to look carefully before you leap into action. Mercury turns retrograde on the 17th, so, despite your agenda, progress will slow down and signals will get crossed. But hey, it's party time.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Network like mad. Coincidentally, the holidays are the best time for you to reach out to folks who may be helpful in the future but are fun to socialize with now. The more varied the assortment of faces, the more enjoyable and valuable the experiences. This is also a good time to get away from the usual office party circuit and explore new terrain and cultures. There's something quite romantic and spiritually satisfying waiting for you as the year winds down; the call, not only of the wild, but the gorgeous as well.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

As a Gemini, you know better than most signs how strange things tend to get in the days before your Mercury ruler does an about-face. Since the messenger will be stopping and starting, doing a stutter-step from Dec. 17th on, consider putting all your plans on hold and winging it. See what happens and where you're at come Epiphany, when the Mardi Gras party season begins. If you're not being pressured to make Yuletide promises and New Year's resolutions, you can't break them. Despite a heightened sense of duty, you're not compelled to obey orders. Not unless you're flying.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

If you're doing things by the book, observing family traditions and feeling a strong sense of obligation, blame it on strict Saturn in your sign. Better to embrace the holiday spirit so that you'll be commended rather than condemned for trying to avoid the emotional overload of the season. So much planetary attention is currently centered in your house of significant others and so many people feel connected to you this year that you'll really disappoint them if you pull a disappearing act and please yourself instead.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Lucky Leo. This time of year your house of romance, recreation and other pleasures is lit like a Christmas tree. Make the most of the goodies and good times while you can. But if you want to be known as a useful, upstanding member of the community, be generous donating time and money to the sick and poor or to the folks who provide the services you can't live without. Charity begins not at home—folks there don't need it—but at the office, the blood bank and Goodwill.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Great expectations: Prosperous, protective Jupiter in your sign this year promises you'll have a particularly enjoyable holiday season. Don't screw it up by insisting that everyone does what you want or shares your feelings. Because your Mercury ruler will be retrograde for the duration, plans probably won't materialize the way you envision, and words will be taken the wrong way. At least there'll be less overt friction; Mars, the god of slash and burn, is finally out of Pisces, where, for the past six months, it managed to irritate most of your partners.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

As usual, your neighbors, friends and family will try to orchestrate your comings and goings during the holiday season. However, you can easily make time for an offbeat admirer and his or her pursuit of whatever is new, different and thrilling. You don't have to be your compliant self, especially since retrograde Mercury will mess up arrangements without your having to make excuses. But try not to fib during the purest of spiritual connections: when your romantic Venus ruler joins idealistic, artistic Neptune for New Year's.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Thank the gods that your Mars co-ruler is in fiery Aries, breathing energy into your love life, instead of in watery Pisces, where it was drowning you in lethargy and waves of confusing emotions. With your Pluto co-ruler also in a fire sign, you might actually feel spirited and sexy this holiday season, eager for adventure and whatever comes your way. Money can be an ongoing issue while Mercury is retrograde in your house of income and assets. Shop early, spend prudently, keep track of receipts and anticipate delivery delays.

IMPROPER sightings

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

US Ambassador to Canada Argeo Paul Cellucci (left) and Canadian Ambassador to the US Michael Kergin avert war.

Brent and Melissa Blackmon spot a rainbow on the southern coast of Maui during their honeymoon. In Hawaii, rainbows lead to roasted pigs and poi instead of pots o' gold.

Prince Faisal al Saud of Saudi Arabia and members of the Saudi-American exchange program are all up in the house—the House of Saud! Cultural tip: If you don't know how to type in Saudi Arabia, just hunt and OPEC.

For Bestmen ONLY...

Doesn't your best friend deserve a first-class send-off, all the way to last call? Then let The Bustonian do all the work. We'll stock The Bustonian with a treasure chest of naughty bachelorette favors, including some even you wouldn't think of.

You can start with a champagne toast then head into your favorite nightclub so the bride-to-be can make out with a stranger for the last time while you dirty dance the night away with some aspiring actor or shoe salesman you've never laid eyes on before. And any time you like, you can all boogie down on Boston's only mobile dance floor, letting it all hang out the windows as we cruise the town.

Go ahead – we'll never tell. And she'll never remember.

Here's your chance to return the favor to the "best friend" who talked you into playing leapfrog on stage with a 250-lb. stripper right in front of your future father-in-law.

Let The Bustonian do all the work for his bachelor party – and learn the true meaning of "payback's a bitch." We'll stock The Bustonian with your poison of choice, which you can drink from a can, bottle, or glass, or right out of our giant ice bucket. Then it's on to a good old-fashioned pub crawl before heading to your favorite bar, where you can talk him into dropping his pants and singing Jingle Bells, and announcing that he is the best-hung elf south of the North Pole.

Go ahead – we'll never tell. And he'll never remember.

A HUNDRED YEARS OLD AND SHE CAN STILL KICK UP HER HEELS...

The magnificence meter was somewhere up in the Gilded Age range when the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum hosted A Centennial Evening to thank major donors to its Centennial Program Fund.

Guests in black tie or period dress arrived to a string quartet playing in the courtyard, which was lit with Japanese lanterns, while waiters passed trays of champagne and irresistible little nibbly things. The jewels came out of the vault for the evening—we're talking serious rocks here—and that was just on the guests. Then there were the models hired to show off some rare gems, like a black opal surrounded by diamonds and an emerald as big as the Ritz, from Tiffany's (one of the evening's sponsors).

The net worth in the room, meanwhile, rivaled the GNP of some civilized countries, with a guest list that included the likes of mutual fund poobah Ned Johnson and the soignee Lilly; cable TV gazillionaire Amos Hostetter and the stunning Barbara; high-tech mogul Ray Stata and the statuesque Maria; real estate titan Bill Poorvu and the lovely Lia; fashion plate Nina Fialkow (whose husband, David, was on a golfing trip with his father) squired by Boston Ballet big cheese Mikko Nissinen; Cambridge architectural giant Graham Gund, whose wife, Ann, co-chaired the evening with Wendy Shattuck; the latter's distinguished other half, Sam Plimpton; recent transplants to Chestnut Hill Julie and Brant Binder; white-hot interior designer Dennis Duffy; a woman who recognized someone from her yoga class by saying, "I'd know your ass anywhere"; and a man who told a prominent socialite, "I love your hair," to which she responded, "Thanks. It's not mine."

Dinner was served upstairs in the Tapestry Room, at tables decorated to a fare-thee-well with giant flower arrangements that had pheasant feathers sticking out of them, and the entertainment included some warbling by world-famous mezzo-soprano Jossie Perez, a dramatic reading by ART actor Jeremy Geidt, and a flamenco performance paying homage to the John Singer Sargent painting El Jaleo in the museum's cloisters. As one attendee put it, "You know you're at a serious party when the New York Times sends a photographer."

MIGHT WE SUGGEST FAMILY COUNSELING?

Wine and hors d'oeuvres might not solve all the world's problems, but they put a dent in one when the Boston Adult Literacy Fund celebrated its 15th anniversary in the showroom of Skinner Auctioneers.

Attendees were treated to a preview of American and European paintings, along with an opportunity to rub elbows with the likes of WBZ blond glamazon Lisa Hughes; best-selling detective novelists Dennis Lehane and Robert B. Parker; the latter's firecracker of a wife, Joan; celebrity restaurateurs Gordon and Fiona Hamersley; tastemaker Tina Sutton and her broadcast journalist husband, John Carroll; superchic decorator Eileen Patterson; talk show hosts Smoki Bacon and Dick Concannon; and one woman who said, "I just heard the two words you never want to hear your hairdresser use—'Oh, no!' It's like your surgeon saying, 'Whoops.'"

However, the most memorable comment came from a woman who said, "I had such screwed-up parents, my husband could be a serial killer and I probably wouldn't notice."

LIKE IT'S 1999...

Everyone knows those Junior Leaguers do good deeds, but who knew they knew how to party? It was like a Texas sorority mixer meets Studio 54, or a country club dinner dance crossed with a Roman orgy, at the Junior League's Fall Ball, held in the grand ballroom of the Ritz.

During the cocktail hour, guests tippled while bidding on an almost obscenely extensive silent auction. The wine flowed freely throughout dinner, and by the time dessert and coffee were served, at least one table had already dug into their goodie bags and donned the light blue bug-eye sunglasses they found there.

Present and accounted for: L.A. and Boston interior designer Jim Swan and his swanlike assistant, Suzanne Logan; engineering whiz kid Vanu Bose; North Shore party pair Trevor and Gigi Gowdy; flawless southern belle Winston Jenkins; and Matt Kelly, who proposed to fiancée Evangelea Spirounias half an hour before the party started. Thankfully, she said yes.

Instead of pearls and twin sets, there were lots of up-dos and cleavage, and the dance floor stayed as busy as the bars did until it was time for the cows to come home. Among the choice comments overheard during the course of the evening:

"She told me the ring she tried on at Shreve's was so expensive they brought out a security guard. Six carats. $160,000. I said, 'Why didn't you look at the good stuff?'"

"I know her from boarding school. Or riding school. Whatever. Same thing."

And from one woman, "My family was in the tannery business on the North Shore," to which the man she was speaking to replied, "Oh. Well, my family was busy tanning in Florida." iB
